DESIRABLE FEED RACK.

It Is Inexpensive To Its Construction and Saves Waste.

When hay is fed loose in the barnyard, a certain per cent of it is trampled under foot and wasted. In order to prevent this, in part at least, a feed rack of some kind should be created in the center of the yard at a point which will be the most easy and pleasant possible. A writer in the New York Tribune gives an illustrated description of a good rack. He says:

A simple but effectual way in which to build one of these feed racks is to begin by cutting four tall posts in the ground in the form of a rectangle, as shown in the cut. Their height and distance apart will determine the size and capacity of the rack. It is inadvisable, however, to make it very wide—say not over 8 feet—as some difficulty would be experienced by the animals in pulling out the hay if placed solidly in the center, for the posts leaning toward the center in order to make the opening wider at the bottom than at the top. This will prevent binding, and in consequence the hay will readily settle as it is being eaten away from below. Firm stays (6 inches above ground) to the top of the posts the sides and ends should be boarded tightly, making it possible for the animal to get at the hay only at the bottom.

To make the rack complete, a manger must be constructed entirely round the upright post. This is best accomplished by setting four short posts securely in the ground opposite the corners, and others between to give firmness to this part, where pressure is brought to bear. If the manger is made slanting and narrow at the bottom, it will prevent animals from getting in, as they are often tempted to do in cold weather. Many consider it a good plan to cover such a rack with a shed roof, thereby keeping the hay dry. This can be done with very little expense. A door, further yet, I would advise having a door at the front of it, hung on hinges, as represented in the illustration, so that it could be let down at will for the insertion of the hay. Thus constructed, the fodder dry, for the most part, in any kind of weather.

In some experiments carried out under the direction of the Vermont Bee keepers' association 17 hives were placed in a room 8 by 24 feet, capable of accommodating 24 colonies. The loss, having come from different sources, was in different cases from one and five to the number were observed closely to determine the best form of frame to adopt in the production of comb or extracted honey and for wintering bees. No perceptible difference has yet been observed.

After the most of feed sugar syrup was fed in different ways to test the ability of bees to change cane sugar into honey sugar. Analyses are given of the honey produced—pure honey and honey that had been substituted with cane sugar. It was found that the best honey was produced when a large quantity of sirup was fed to the bees rapidly. The resulting honey did not granulate. When s
