The peanut acreage in Santa Anna valley, Cal., has increased 5-eighths this year over the acreage of 1896.

At La Grande, Ore., Monday night, Wm. Truckel was killed while walking on the night shift of the French company's mines at Woodley, by the caving in of rock.

Thomas Maloney, 4 years old, living in San Francisco, was knocked down by an electric car Thursday while crossing Mission street, and his feet were crushed by the wheels.

Early Thursday morning four fishing boats were capsized in the breakers at the mouth of the Columbia river, Oregon. John Marjanen was drowned and two others are missing.

Chief of Police Kingsbury of Stockton, Cal., resigned the position Wednesday evening and was immediately elected as a patrolman on the force. The reason for the action is found in the fact that a new city administration is about taking office, and a new police commission and a new chief will result. He has been descriptive enough to act as chief pending the appointment by the new board of a successor.

Wednesday night a young boy named Ole Olsson was killed at New Westminster, B. C., under most distressing circumstances. His father is a locomotive cleaner at that station and was cleaning an engine there while Ole and his young brother were playing around the locomotive. Ole jumped on the cow catcher unknown to his father, who at that moment started the engine. The boy lost his balance and fell beneath the wheels, his head and shoulders being crushed. He died were several hours from his body. Death was instantaneous.

While polishing the glass panel of the elevator door on the fourth floor of the Pacific Mutual Insurance company's building in San Francisco on Wednesday morning, Jens Nelson, the head janitor of the building, lost his hold and fell down the elevator shaft to the concrete pavement of the basement. He was picked up and taken to the receiving hospital, where he soon afterward died. Nine bones in his body were broken, although the distance he fell was fully forty feet. His death was caused by internal injuries resulting from his contact with the concrete pavement.

W. H. Knowlton, known as "the gold brick man," had a fight Wednesday night in the hallway of a lodging house with his former friend and partner Anthony Melion, alias Kelly, who is said to be the superior of Knowlton at his own business. Melion held Knowlton up with the latter's revolver and taken $1,800 from him. Knowlton chased Melion down the stairs and jumped on him. Then commenced the struggle for life or death. During the fight Melion's revolver was discharged, slightly wounding the latter. Knowlton then took the gun and gave Melion a terrible beating with it. The money had dropped to the sidewalk. Knowlton had his adversary with one hand and snapped up his money with the other. He held his man until the police arrived, and both were locked up.

Information from San Bernardino, Cal., is to the effect that trouble is brewing among the employes of the Southern California railway, and especially in the ranks of those working in the railroad shops there. Many of the men employed in the shops have their homes in Los Angeles and long have enjoyed the benefit of reduced fares whenever they desired to go to Los Angeles to visit their families. Now orders have been promulgated and never mind have been issued special rates over the road and told they would hereafter have to pay full rates. The lopping off of peanuts has caused much dissatisfaction and may result in a general strike unless cooler counsels prevail or the obnoxious order is rescinded. The cause of the issuance of such an order is said to be due to the desire of San Bernardino merchants to keep the trade at home. They fear that employes of the shops at Los Angeles to trade, whereas if they had to pay full fare they would spend their money with San Bernardino merchants.

The circumstances are said to be very bad all over the country this spring, says the Denver Field and Farm. These caterpillars are larvæ of night flying moths. They are also large eaters of leaves, a common one being that known as the variegated cutworm. The moths lay their eggs during the summer months; they hatch generally feed upon grass during one summer and autumn. During winter they secrete themselves in grass, under boards, in the ties, and early in the spring are ready to attack any green vegetation. In gardens it pays well to trap them in pitfalls, dig out the eggs and kill them wherever they may be at work. A good method also consists in making up a poisoned mixture consisting of bran or other meal, with water enough to cover it, to which is added a little molasses and some paris green. A tablespoonful of this mixture placed in spots out in the garden late in the day, at intervals of about every five feet. The worms work at night and will be killed by eating the poisoned mixture, but care must be taken that fowls may not get hold of it.

Denver Field and Farm: Eugene V. Debs is sending out missionaries in nearly every state in the west to establish a co-operative commonwealth. He shall attract the attention of the world. His Colorado emissaries in Denver late week in a yellow van, on each side of which are painted the words, "Co-operative Commonwealth Van." The missionaries who go with the van are James Hogan, vice-president of the American Railway union, who was Debs' right hand man in the Chicago strike, and who served nine months in the Woodstock jail with Debs for contempt of court; S. J. Gilbert, a local revolutionary socialist who believes in the present form of system must be modified by violence; and W. Jean Holmes, who was prominent in the Haymarket riots in Chicago. They will preach socialism in every important town in the state, and prepare the way for the inauguration of Debs's co-operative commonwealth. Following is the partial itinerary of the van: Glenwood Springs, June 3; Fort Collins, June 6; Loveland, June 8; Longmont, June 9; Louisville, June 10; Longmont, June 11; Brighton, June 12-13; Littleton, June 14-15. From Littleton the van will go south to Colorado Springs, taking in the principal towns on its way, having several stopping four or five days. From Pueblo they will go to La Veta, thence over La Veta pass into the San Luis valley. The van will be about three weeks for the purpose, and will visit the Ouray colony, a socialistic settlement which was established two years ago. Then they will go to Grand Junction and make their way back, stopping at Leadville, Aspen and all of the mining towns.
