BUSINESS STILL ACTIVE

Stock Brokers Continue to Do Good Work in the Pit.

THE CHLORIDE POINT MINE AND MILL.

Faith in the Buckeye—Missouri's Delegates to the Congress—Miscellaneous Mining Items.

WAR tax or no war tax, the stock brokers still continue to attend to business. Having decided that their clients did not pay Uncle Sam's exaction, they have concluded that they have nothing to worry over, nor neither do they, to affront the good volume of business transacted in the pit today. Over 14,000 shares of mining stocks changed hands and figures remained in relatively good place, although the usual fluctuations were in evidence, here an advance there a slight decline.

True to their patriotic instincts, Eagle was bought up in good order and suffered the humiliation of making the best transfers. This it did at 64 cents, a gain which captured 1,000 shares and which would have taken more had there been further offerings. Powered a method at Four Aces, the stock was more passive, fluctuating in a set of 7½ cents, but as no trading was included in the next number was called, broad Central responding with an advance of 20 shares at 2.80 a share. This security was strong with 2,000 shares extra was the closing figure asked for those in possession. Geyser-Marion, concerning which much by the report of a coming dividend, held up very well during the call and sold at figures carrying 79c, 1c in advance. Ontario, which had sold at 1,500 shares, changed ownership, Sacramento was stationary as were also the consolidated and already mentioned in this category.

Giving attention to stocks unlisted, the Boston and Montana company was put at its 15c, but it was so to be either wanted more and sold it. The Jerry Cook stock was put at 10c cents. In this class of stocks Alice was also a seller, business being made at 17½ and by some others reported as lying in the trading, although Swansea, South Swansea, Chloride Point and Bonner were relatively good figures, the former being wanted at 2.40 and the latter asked for at 41.25%.

FAITH IN THE BUCKEYE.

There are Those Who Think It Will Yet Come to the Front.

That the Buckeye, despite its many disappointments, is still in the minds of the front as a coming mine, is the opinion of many of those interested in the property. It is said that when the property is handled and more thoroughly developed it would undoubtedly show when it was taken in hand by those who in past workings have set pointed in that direction.

At present Judge Green, who is handling the mine on a lease, has developed a nice streak of copper ore both above and below the 200-foot level and this is following with the lines of mineral into the main lender. In the bottom of the shaft, at a depth of 300 feet, there is said to be showings of the gold ore, but as water hinders the work at that point, nothing has been done to demonstrate its extent. Those interested in the mine will meet tomorrow when an assessment of $100 will be made, and in event, the purpose being to sink out an indebtedness of $3,000.

THE CHLORIDE POINT MILL.

It Starts Up Under Very Favorable Auspices—In the Mine.

Bill Parlon, who came in last evening after a few days' stay at the Chloride Point or Lead Hill, is authority for the statement that the new mill works like a charm, and that it will not be long before it clearly demonstrates that the sound for said Point which it was built is worth something, despite the misfortune of many people to the contrary. The crushers are now running on a coarse ore for the tank bottoms and when this is completed, the regular ore-bins will begin, and the mine's ore bodies treated for values.

A gentleman much interested in the property said today, that for the ore that found in the Chloride Point was known to be the best kind for milling purposes. He called attention to the amount of mineral in sight as computed by a Chinese expert last October, who measured up ore to the tune of $1,000,000, his figures being based on average assays of 50 ounces silver and $2 to $4 in gold, and made the statement that vastly more had opened up since that time, this giving those interested an idea of what the mine would pay if it be forced, and the gentleman, that so can were from 40 to 65 per cent of the ore, which it is claimed the mine will be on a paying basis from now on. Will Orr, the cyanide man, is now out at the property attending to his part of the proceedings.

STILL AT LOGGERHEADS.

Two Big Mining Companies Commence Suit, One Against the Other.

The Montana Ore Purchasing company yesterday commenced an action in the United States court against the Boston and Montana company in which an injunction is sought against the defendant to prevent the Boston and Montana company from taking ores from the Horn Silver mine. It is alleged in the complaint in court that already the Montana company has taken from the ground, belonging to the plaintiff, and if an injunction is not issued, then it will be a loss to the great detriment and damage to plaintiff. It is said that the value of the ore taken caused by a suit filed in the state court on the same grounds amounts to $1,000,000 as only a restraining order was asked for in the present case so full at law was filed. The court made an order fixing the defendant company to appear and show cause why a restraining order should not be granted in favor of the defendant on the grounds named in the complaint.

The Boston and Montana company organized under the laws of the state of New York and doing business in the state of Montana yesterday filed suit in the United States court against the Montana Ore Purchasing company for $500,000 damages. The plaintiff states that the defendant company has taken prior to April 11, 1898, large quantities of ore from beneath the surface of the premises of the Boston and Montana, belonging to plaintiff, the value of said ore being $500,000. In this case two suits were filed, one in law and the other in equity. A restraining order was asked for and granted—Butte Miner.

Took a Mine by Force.

R. P. Plowman has relocated the Washington mine, one of the oldest properties in the basin, located near Idaho City. The mine is claimed by Charles Hallett and he yesterday commenced suit in the United States court against Mr. Plowman to recover possession of the property and for damages. Mr. Plowman took forcible possession of the property, driving away Mr. Hallett and his employees from there. He claims the mine was never properly located and in addition, that the assessment work for the year 1897 was not performed.—Boise Statesman.

MISSOURI'S DELEGATES.

Governor Stevens Selects a Representative Body for the Mining Congress.

Jefferson City, Mo., June 21.—Gov. Stevens has selected the following well known Missourians to represent the state at the International Mining Congress, to be held at Salt Lake City, Utah, July 4, 5, 6, 1898:

Major Henry Engelmann, Hon. Wm. J. Stone, Chas. D. McGhee, Alexander Monroe, Hon. John Hay, Hon. C. C. Maxwell, Harry B. Hawes, St. Louis; Joseph H. Shannon, Frank Dexter, G. C. Broadhead, Jas. O'Neil, Chas. P. Dorrance, Kansas City; Chas. J. Fox, Joplin; J. Gallmeyer, Jefferson City; Dr. L. J. Minter, Smithville; Chas. Morbeider, Springfield; Hon. Chas. Parker, Joplin; Dr. John Hall, Marshall; J. Todd, Maryville; W. T. Baird, Kirksville; Prof. Geo. H. Ladd, Columbia; Chas. Carter, Butte; John McNichols, Platte City; E. D. Abt, Trenton; M. M. Fogg, Springfield; Hon. John C. Cravens, Carrollton; George Wilson, Lexington; T. G. Linton, Clifton; W. S. McClintic, Monroe City; Richard Miles, Denver; W. F. Lyon, Kansas City, and John S. Clay, Farmington.

The Mexia Shows Wire Gold.

The Grand Valley Times says considerable interest is being shown in the property opened up by John H. Shafer on the Wilson mesa. This is a soft decomposed quartzite. Panning shows wire gold and recently in fairly big quantities, so many returns have yet been received on it. A shaft is now down over 20 feet and a solid formation has not been reached. The mesa is a place that has had little attention in the past and it has been regarded as a purely medicinal formation, but the little attention already given it has shown it to be a mineral. Mr. Shafer will ship ore sacks of quartz and granite. The mesa is a flat-topped spur of the La Sal's and has an elevation of about 5,000 feet.

Mexican Cyanide Shipment.

The Mexia reported today with its regular semi-monthly shipment of cyanide bullion, which it is said was from $20 to $25 in value. The shipment went to the local branch of the Kansas Consolidated Refinery.

Dips and Spurs.

Silver, 59½; lead, $3.20.

Three shifts are now working the Centennial-Eureka.

Thomas Wife of the Highland Boy, went today in a suit to the site of the proposed smelter near Murray.

The Utah mine's recent shipment of 17 tons of ore assayed 8 per cent lead and 31 ounces silver to the ton.

The Copper-Marion company will have a meeting tomorrow, at which time action will be taken on a dividend.

American Fork World: A number of the boys started out last Saturday for the Tintic country where they will do considerable prospecting in the vicinity of the Gold Hill mines.

Grand Valley Times: The camps on Mill Creek and Mesa's lease are maintaining a steady look. The DeAvey brothers are pushing work on their claims on Middle mountain. Assay returns had not been received yesterday, but they are confident on the showing made of free gold in the pan.

Mine Weather and Crops.

Idaho Falls, Idaho, June 21, 1898.—The week ending Monday, June 20, 1898, opened with scattered thunderstorms and occasional rain of such light spread after a day or two by more settled conditions and exceedingly warm weather, which continued through the remainder of the week.

Though there was no absence of high winds until very late in the week, evaporation was the greatest, with an abundance of hot sunshine, and generally, wherever possible, irrigation set in progress. The water supply was much needed and its effect is already seen in the good growth of all vegetation. Grain and hay fields, in general circumstances, in the northern and western sections many wheat fields are heading and in the eastern the crop is rapidly approaching that stage. In various parts of the state rye has been cut with good results. Highland are doing well, though some complain of lack of moisture. Potatoes are generally up and looking authentically. The outlook for fruit, especially the peaches variation is very promising; a few instances of the blossoms, perhaps more or less damaged from insects. Hopping has begun in parts of the western section and the outlook is good. Sheep, experts as to probable yields are uniformly encouraging. The coast is excellent. Yours truly, H. A. Ellis.

D. P. McCALLUM,
Section Director.

PROVO.

PROVO, UTAH, JUNE 21, 1898.

District Court.

The following business was transacted in the Fourth district court yesterday: KOU A. Hines vs. H. S. Hines, motion to strike out a portion of complaint and demurrer argued and submitted; demurrer sustained.

Estate of John W. Blackburn, deceased; hearing on account and, and the matter taken under advisement.

William R. Cook, of Thousand Lakes, has commenced suit against the Oregon Short Line Railway company to collect $5 for a Durham cow alleged to have been killed by the defendant company's train on the 21st day of July, 1897. Warner & Hoxie are plaintiff's attorneys.

In the matter of the estate of Dan Buchanan, deceased, a demurrer to the petition of John Buchanan, contesting the order of the probate court, showing why a note of $2,000 allowed by the administrators and approved by the court should not be disallowed and to be a claim against the estate, was argued and taken under advisement.

Notes and Personals.

The committee appointed by the city council to ascertain whether the city could legally appropriate money to the sufferers from the Park City fire, met last evening and decided to refer the matter to the city attorney to the effect that the city had no authority to appropriate money, which must be derived from private citizen's train on the 21st day of July, 1897. Warner & Hoxie are plaintiff's attorneys.

In the matter of the estate of Dan Buchanan, deceased, a demurrer to the petition of John Buchanan, contesting the order of the probate court, showing why a note of $2,000 allowed by the administrators and approved by the court should not be disallowed and to be a claim against the estate, was argued and taken under advisement.

Notes and Personals.

The committee appointed by the city council to ascertain whether the city could legally appropriate money to the sufferers from the Park City fire, met last evening and decided to refer the matter to the city attorney to the effect that the city had no authority to appropriate money, which must be derived from private citizens. Mayor Jones reported that he and President of Council Brock had telegraphed to Governor Wells and Mayor Sheeler of Salt Lake City that the council and citizens would extend aid if it would be acceptable. Telegrams were received in response that the mayor would advise them today if aid is needed. Pending the latter's notice, a committee of five was appointed with the understanding that, even if it should be decided to do nothing by the city, the citizens might still be asked if the Park City will accept assistance.

The case of assault and battery against George W. Gee in Justice Beatty's court, on complaint of John Michelsen, will be heard next Saturday.

The Spencer Dramatic company, which is playing here for a week, is receiving favorable comments from the dailies, and will play to larger houses each night.

Marriage license have been issued to Charles C. F. Dixon and Adelia A. Schaeffer, both of Provo; Ralph Parson, John Gutherson, aged 24, and Hannah Hodson, aged 22, both of Provo; Joseph Wardell to Mary Ann Bird, both of Provo, and Laura Bird, aged 18, both of Provo.

The following notices of mining locations have been filed with the county recorder: Gold Hill, Ophir district, Park mining district, by Jos. J. Brunswick; Blake in Camp Floyd mining district, by John J. Brown.

THE MEANING OF "OLD GLORY."

Edith Discovers It for Herself All at Once

(Memory for June.)

"Mr. Murphy 'ins it thus," Ralph hesitated in the pause that followed his announcement.

"Hy says 'ere," interrupted Edith hotly, "oh Ralph, what hav you to do with this silly old war? I can't see you go."

"But my dear girl, it's—"

"It isn't a reason. It's hysteria. It's Phaedra. It's pity for the soldiers."

"There are some who think the man's country calls for him, and there is no reason he shouldn't go."

"There are some who have be to engaged to be married to such a one girl? Hertoo but never politely. I suppose I'm selfish, but I love my country, and thousands part as much as I love you. In the civil war the women always said, 'go boys, go! be the best to keep you,' with a smile on their lips, and were broadfaced only when it, Mary, to wave disgraceful or marry it's just the thing. I don't know how more or anything else. I love you."

"Well, I've been good to you, too, and I don't know how I'm to get off, at least thing. Oh, I know I am not appearing well! The way to truly showing he to be wise you had three weeks'notice. But you could give them all for your country. I am small and selfish, and I don't blame you if you are disgusted with me. I deserve it. You can break with me altogether, and I won't make a move to keep you." And he paused for this, she caught both arms tightly around his neck. Ralph looked troubled, but his affection evidently survived the confession.

"I'll tell you," he said presently. "Walk down to the recruiting office with me, and wait. Then, if you still feel this way, I will put off enlisting until the next call for volunteers. Will that do, little girl?"

Edith reflected that the government might not need a second call, and agreed.

"I know how I ought to feel about it," she said later, a little wistfully, "I can't appreciate patriotism. I know how beautiful and noble it is. Only I feel can't feel it, and I'm not to be honest."

The street in front of the recruiting office was used with men, while scores of children frisked the edges of the crowd. Every one who went in the door and everyone who came out was cheered, and commented on with the jovial irony in which the Americans clothe his enthusiasm.

"Wear your coats, boy—only ten cents, all silk!" shrieked a small vendor of the cheap tray of badges under Edith's eyes.

"No, no," she exclaimed incoherently. "Sorry I don't get an opportunity to aid you, if it don't fit, tell them," he said with cheerful impertinence.

Edith pretended not to hear, but she winced more than she would have confessed at the threat. You may deny yourself to be unpatriotic, but if you are forced to have stress, boys hear it for you.

A double cheer went up for a young sailor who passed, blushing through the door that led to glory, and a woman turned to Edith with a beaming smile.

"Isn't it just beautiful?" she cried. "Of course, we don't have to wait quite so long when he waits his boys. They just fall over themselves to help him prepare."

"But war is so dreadful," entered Edith, with a sudden coughing to have some one hear her. "Ralph was talking with a lump in his throat."

"Why, I'd as soon call I'm a hero as a coward," said the woman sensibly. "Dying this way you're doing as much for anybody. It's marching down the front steps in Ralph's place, instead of sneaking out by the back door, that's all."

"Oh, but if you had people belonging to you, you'd feel differently! I feel that way," she spoke half-contemptuously. Lucy was second to be married, but Ralph had spoken of her as "a sister," was the little answer.

The girl turned away, metaphorically speaking, and left the woman.

"You can't care so I do," she said to herself. "Any way, I ought to be with the others. Ralph's face was red with sudden tears and she was at her breath shortly on a case of "chest trouble." Edith's fresh cheeks, the young fellow flushed and hesitatingly made his way through the crowd to a seat, and she was watching him wearily.

"They took you, did they?" was his greeting. The soldier nodded. "Well, you know what I said about being off to duty for a lot of mushy stuff," he said, "you got for it—thirteen dollars a month, and a chance to be a hero. Don't darkened, but he made no answer as they walked away.

"Finish that Degas on Ralph's arm, 'Wrinkles,' you take to his kin." she said. "How could he not blush—in Provo, of all places, to be seen with the crooked Scotch guilty, was a quick silence at Ralph's face. If he was any considerable of a hero, he made no use to betray it.

"Well, Edith," he said, "been here to enlist?" and a voice behind her.

"Oh, captain, don't!" she exclaimed, turning to an elderly man of military appearance. "I'm all upset. I think it is wicked! Everybody is patriotic but me. I'm selfish and unpatriotic. Ralph is all in war, I suppose, I wish he hadn't I do. I'm all in war, I wish he hadn't I do."

"You can't help it, my child. A woman's country is a thing that will not be sentimental every time. If it's worth the fight, it will yield the fire, and I'm glad of it. Didn't I go to Shiloh? I'll go to Manila."

"Well, I don't mind the fire, I don't believe in the war," said Edith desperately.

"Neither do I, but I'm going if they'll take me. I've just about made up my mind to me, and I want to have it out." The girl looked at him with a simple, thrilled faith in such a heroic face, took her dreams out of her eyes, for the first time since Ralph had made his announcement.

"I don't see how you can fight for a cause you don't believe in," she said, "but I'm sure that there was no compulsion in her voice.

"If your country wants you, compelled why, they let it home and call her she might not to have you there." Also that Ed. Pitch in said, "Let her go and then would hear, if you like." Ed. is a right in your opinion, but she was not quite ready to be convinced. The soldier was flowed with enthusiasm, and the man amongst stepped their approval. Edith lifted her head and looked at the speaker. Her heart was beating accordingly.

A movement in the crowd made her look up. A window sill above them had been opened, and Rose it was leaning out, her pretty face, her golden waits and ringlets, such as Edith and the other house, but a soiled and faded ribbon, tossed on the edge of dainty stained and set with black offered bounds. As it stood, Hand out above their heads, the harsh reality of war against the brilliant ideal of its natural fellow beings, a momentary lash fell on the crowd. Then the lips came off and the feeling that had welled up broke out in the shout that burst as no other human voice could, the shout that means our country. The spontaneous order of number into the call of fifes sounded by white from the new tents as our tiny army, their face and stressed above the heads of the tattered handkerchiefs. Edith made Ralph to the area, her face uplifted, and knew that something had been taken within her which could never or kill.

Up went the colors as the fife and drum fifers, swung their bulldogs, marching down the city street, Ralph and Edith standing in the rear. The boys were marching straight into each other's eyes.

A distant voice forced against they ears.

"What's in it? Time enough for all that." It was Fredda, the girl who Ralph should miss the member like an ill-fitted goddess of liberty.

"Yes, what's in it?" Edith's face a smile, she said, with tender eyes. "That was in worth a million bonnet, Rose. It's greater than anything in the world, or those are saying. It means her country." Then she turned to the man for her. "Ralph, I'm ready. I'm all you to be among the first," she said.
