THE BLACK HAWK REUNION.

Today, August 19, is the 28th anniversary of the signing of the treaty of peace at the close of the Black Hawk Indian war, when that chief and his followers formally agreed to cease hostilities against the white men. For two and a half years an Indian war had been raging, involving all of the southern and central counties of Utah, from the south line of Salt Lake county to the State boundary. A little while previous to the actual negotiations of the treaty, Black Hawk himself had been induced to assume a peaceful attitude, yet his subordinate continued hostile operations, and even for several months after the treaty was signed, Indian depredations occasionally occurred.

There have been several Indian wars during the experience of the people in settling Utah; but that known as the Black Hawk war was of far greater magnitude than any of the others, and for a long time placed central and southern Utah settlements in a very precarious condition. The victory was finally achieved by the militia, the general government having declined to extend the military assistance that was asked and that was given in Indian wars in other states and territories. Of the burden that came upon the people and militia the official report points out that six extensive and flourishing settlements in Sevier and Piute counties, four settlements in Sanpete, fifteen settlements in Iron, Kane and Washington counties and two or three in Wasatch county had been abandoned, with almost a total loss of stock and improvements; that about seventy white people lost their lives; and that independent of any pay for services of the militia the expense to the Territory of military operations against the Indians was $1,121,037.75. This sum, justly chargeable to the general government, and the amount that should have gone to the militia for service in the campaign, have never been paid. The expenses as here stated represented but a small item of the cost of the war to the people, and gives an account of the great amount of suffering occasioned by the exposed settlers—men, women and children.

The particular incident that precipitated the Black Hawk war may be regarded as quite insignificant in itself, in comparison with what followed. In a spirit of sport, a half-drunken man rudely pulled a young Indian chief from his horse. This was at Manti, Sanpete county, April 9, 1865. There had been a restlessness among the Indians previous to that time, and the chief Black Hawk and his band, chiefly composed of Utes, had been engaged in several thieving raids. But the Manti affair was the match which started the blaze, and next day three white men were killed, one in Sanpete and two in Sevier county. From that time the troubles spread quickly. Before it was over 2,000 militia were engaged in active service, contending with the Indians in canyons and mountain fastnesses. The two chief engagements of the war were in 1866, at Gravelly Ford and Thistle Valley, in both of which Black Hawk displayed his reckless courage. At the former place he was slightly wounded, but soon recovered. Finally, after a most difficult and vigorous campaign, the Indians found themselves being worsted on all sides, and agreed to terms of peace.

The lapse of thirty years since those troublous times has witnessed the calling away of many of those who took part in the conflict, but even yet a goodly number remain. They were brave men and women who endured too, who participated in that struggle, and today when the survivors assemble in happy reunion, it is meet to accord them praise and honor for their heroic deeds, well performed in the days of peril and adversity. Long live the noble veterans of the Black Hawk war!

In connection with reference to this subject may be noted an incident reported at the Sanpete Stake conference on Saturday last. Sanpete county was in the midst of the greatest troubles of the Black Hawk war. Last Saturday the Bishop of Indianola, in that county, reported the condition of the Indian settlement there. This year one of the red men had raised 500 bushels of wheat, another 300, another 200, and others less amounts. From savages formerly they have turned to arts of peace, and look upon the white settlers as their best and warmest friends. In the hearts of the war veterans assembling to-morrow to commemorate a struggle fraught with serious consequences, there is also toward the Indian the best and kindliest feelings. Between the red man and the white man in Utah, the bloody antagonisms of the past has gone forever, giving place to the harmony of the true brotherhood of man.

UNFORTUNATE PERSONALITIES.

There will be few thoughtful people who will approve of Senator Thurston of Nebraska in his repetition of the abusive statements of a newspaper concerning Wm. J. Bryan. The senator is an able man, well known because of his long association with the Union Pacific as its general solicitor. When he descends to personalities in any reference to Mr. Bryan as being hired as a lawyer to maintain the interest of certain classes, the senator's friends themselves fell that he was not only throwing stones while in a glass house, but was bringing disrepute on an honorable profession by intimating that engaging in it was something despicable; and this conclusion is reached independent of political bias.

There should be no odium attached to Mr. Thurston because, before he became a senator, he followed his profession as lawyer, and in that capacity was an employee of a railway. He attended to his business well, and deserved praise therefor. So, if Mr. Bryan has been an employed attorney of a railway corporation, or of a combination of mine owners, or of a private client, while he followed his employment in a legitimate manner he had a perfect right to do so, and no man with a fine sense of honor would have conceived or connected to a word of criticism on that score. But when any man, be he hired attorney or office holder, points the finger of scorn at legitimate employment, he condemns himself beyond the standard which requires public respect, until he renounces such action.

It would be a great thing for the country if political campaigns could be conducted without the greatest abuse of the personal rights of the electors; but it seems that such is not to be the case. If it were an established rule among the leaders in politics that they would not descend to unwarranted personal abuse in campaigns, some improvement in present conditions might be hoped for; but when dignified candidates do not observe such a rule the smaller fry may not be expected to do so. In this particular case, Mr. Bryan has shown that the insinuation against him, through the charge made of any real wrong on his part, was unfounded. If the circumstances of the assistant in this instance were to put an end to personal attacks on candidates who really do not have bad records, the people of the nation would feel more pleasant over politics than they do now. No party is better than another in this respect, and individuals are not as culpable as they would be were the custom of abusing an opponent less general; but the custom should be shattered.

A NEW TYPE OF SHIP.

If reports are true the oceans will shortly be traversed by vessels of an entirely new type. A French inventor, M. Bazin, is said to have constructed a boat shortly to make a trial trip on the English channel, and if it fulfills all expectations, it will not take long before the majestic racers on the Atlantic will be considered old-fashioned, for the new craft will take their place, as they render their predecessors useless.

The new vessel may be described as a ship on wheels. But these wheels or rollers are not used as paddles or propellers, but only to overcome friction. By a nice adjustment of the relative motion of the wheels, according to the speed of the vessel, the inventor claims that the friction of the water will be almost entirely overcome, thus greater speed than that now attained should thus be possible.

Concerning the experiment that led to the construction of the wheel-ship, the following details have been published. First, the inventor placed a hollow wheel in a tank. It floated vertically with about a third of its bulk immersed. Upon sound without any forward movement, it continued to revolve without moving from its place, and this proved to M. Bazin that he could not rely upon the revolution of the wheel alone for the propulsion of his vessel. At this time quickly the wheel forward without revolving it, and the effect was exactly the same as with an ordinary boat—that is to say, it threw up a good deal of water in front, and left a trail behind. Moreover, it only advanced four or five feet, and did not show the slightest tendency to revolve. This discovered M. Bazin that he would have to give to the wheel both a revolving and forward motion. Therefore, spinning the wheel and pushing it forward, the hollow disk traversed the whole length of the tank with scarcely any agitation to the water whatever.

A vessel of this construction, it is claimed, cannot sink. If one or more of the cells are perforated in a collision the ship would only proceed at reduced speed while the damage was being repaired. A rather fortunate advantage is claimed for the vessel. It is said to feel the motion of the waves but little. To demonstrate this a model was placed in a basin of water, and its surface was agitated to represent waves. These rose to the level of the deck, but the ship rode as steadily.

Admiral Cochrane, a French naval authority is said to be a believer in the possibilities of M. Bazin's invention.

GOOD ADVICE.

The Springfield, Mass., Republican, which by the way does not like politics but is an example of conservation and dignity in its discussion, has the following advice to Massachusetts political speakers, it contains no much of the true American spirit which is essential to the success of popular government, and is as applicable to public speakers generally, that we reproduce it for their consideration:

Let us keep cool on both sides, and be fair—or as near as fair as we can. Quite too much invective is being hurled at Messrs. Bryan and Williams by men who do not like the gospel they expound—or on the other hand, hard by, Mr. Williams is called to account for his "money power" and unfair seward such newspapers as do not accept his point of view. Quite too much space seems to our conscientious, and have seen so much greater with the statesman Mr. Williams himself. We have proved to him quite as cordially as he has done. All this is never on one side of a political campaign, and a choice of evils is no new thing in American politics, so no surprise is indulged, and in that spirit we conclude of which we should need to be ashamed in our calmer moments. The practice of courtesy is indeed "the greatest of lubricants," said "Joe's you forget it," as the children say!

ONE WAY TO SETTLE IT.

For some time past a suspense suit has been in court in Union county, New York, and has been stubbornly contested on every point raised. Last week an amended answer was put in to the complaint, and time was asked to prepare a reply. The court asked when time was desired, when the lawyers said "ten years." The court evidently had got tired of the case and wanted just such an opportunity, for it announced an adjournment of the hearing until August, 1906, adding, "and members of the jury can depart hence, to appear again promptly at that time." From the ages of the parties litigant, and some of the jurors, it is likely that they will be in another sphere of existence ere the time set for resuming the case, which likely will settle itself in the interim. It is only in rare instances that delays in trial courts are not already too great and too injurious, and this case appears to be one of the exceptions to the general rule.

MAJOR E. A. LITTLEFIELD, a veteran newspaper man in Utah, and more particularly at Ogden, proposes to start a daily paper in the Junction city next week, for Bryan—Bimetallism and Protection—not one, but both. The silver Republicans of Ogden and Weber county, who according to all accounts, are 10 to 1 of the party, will thus have an organ to represent their side of the numerition, and the major is the very man to give them what they need.

THE BOSTON HERALD pays a high tribute to Samuel H. Buttle, a member of its staff of local reporters who had served the paper for twenty years, and who was buried on Saturday last. It says of him:

He never wrote anything that he would not sign his name to, and he never made an enemy except of a wrongdoer.

The Idol Passes.
