DOG SHOW DRAWS MANY THOUSANDS

Attendance Yesterday and Today Greatly Increased—Exhibition Closes Tonight.

PROVES MOST SUCCESSFUL.

Winners Will All Be Known When the Doors Close This Evening—Rink Open Monday.

The second annual bench show of the Utah Kennel club will come to a close tonight and all the winners in the various classes will then be known. The show has proved to be a most successful one and nothing has occurred to cause any complaint whatever. Yesterday and last evening the attendance was greatly increased and the big auditorium was thronged today with people anxious to see the dogs. Nearly every person that has passed through the gates has expressed surprise at the large number of fine canines on exhibition, and great interest has been manifested in the work of Judge Brulette of Chicago. The rink where he looks over the dogs is a center of attraction and his work so far has given entire satisfaction.

Dr. J. W. Grey, superintendent of the big show, has been generously complimented for the general excellence of the arrangements and the care given to the dogs. The judging continued at 2 o'clock this afternoon and will not be finished until late tonight. On Monday evening the big rink will again be opened for roller skating. The winners yesterday were announced last night as follows:

HOW HACKENSCHMIDT DEFEATED JOE ROGERS

Details of the wrestling match between Hackenschmidt and Joe Rogers for the championship of the world, held in London a few weeks ago, have been sent here. Rogers concedes that the Russian Lion was entitled to all the honors of the occasion and believes him the greatest wrestler in the world. For himself, he says that he suffered an attack of rheumatism 10 days before the match, but kept the engagement in order to satisfy the public. Immediately the wrestlers were ordered to "hold to" they closed with neck holds. Hackenschmidt relinquished an attempt at a half-nelson and then confined his attention to waist holds, all of which proved unavailing. The wrestlers were soon upright again, but Hackenschmidt would not allow his opponent to rest and kept him moving at a very rapid pace.

So far, Rogers had been acting almost entirely on the defensive, and while attempting some offensive work he found himself again on the mat and fighting hard to avoid defeat. While on hands and knees, Rogers being undermost, the Russian played for a roll-over, but the American kept altering his position, tactics which compelled his adversary to change his methods. Instead of regaining his feet Rogers still clung to the mat and with Hackenschmidt on top the latter was given another opportunity of effecting and armlock.

Rogers was not feeling the effects of the pace, which had, since the start, been set by the Russian. Lying flatly on his chest, Rogers allowed his rival to get almost complete command of his left arm, while the American's legs were locked in such a position as to be almost immovable. Just as Hackenschmidt had effected an arm-lock and was maneuvering for a roll-over, Rogers wriggled from his grasp and assumed a safe position. But a few seconds later Rogers once more faced the mat and while resting on the left shoulder he left himself open for Hackenschmidt to gain a powerful wrist-lock. Keeping the right arm outstretched and confining his attention to effecting a lock with the left arm, Hackenschmidt had his man in a desperate position. Gradually Rogers was rolled over; his right arm was powerless and his legs were locked in such a manner as to be of little use to him. Hackenschmidt brought every ounce of his enormous strength to bear and it was only a question of how long the stamina of Rogers would last. A huge cheer rent the air as Hackenschmidt pinned both shoulders to the mat, thus gaining the first fall in 7 minutes 35 seconds.

After 10 minutes' interval the contestants again took the mat to battle for the second fall, amid considerable applause, Hackenschmidt quickly darted for a neck hold, but Rogers was alert, and with heads hard together they angled for holds. After they broke loose Rogers stood erect, but before he fully realized how it happened he was on the mat. It was a brilliant move on the part of the Russian, who gripped his adversary round the hips and turned him over. It seemed one continuous move, executed with lightning rapidity. Rogers landed heavily on his left elbow, and many thought he had been damaged, but he assumed a kneeling position and allowed the Russian to do all the work.

Unfortunately for Rogers, he played into Hackenschmidt's hands by clinging to the mat. This enabled the Russian to work in the Greco-Roman style—all holds above the waist—a style of which Hackenschmidt is particularly fond. Rogers was on his knees and Hackenschmidt picked him up with a crotch hold from behind. The Russian pulled Rogers on to his side, but the latter turned on his face. Finding himself balked by these methods, the Russian tried a waist and arm hold on the left side. Still unable to succeed in his object, Hackenschmidt changed to the right side and tried to pull his man over, but all to no purpose. Securing a strong arm-lock, Hackenschmidt by sheer strength placed Rogers in an extremely awkward position. The Russian, on his knees, kept Rogers' left arm tightly locked, and then played on the right arm for a roll over. Rogers fought desperately hard to relieve himself, but he could get no purchase with his limbs, which were all at the mercy of Hackenschmidt. The excitement was now intense, as the Russian was straining every nerve and muscle to bring the contest to an end. Panting heavily, the American strove his hardest to extricate himself, but the Russian Lion, full of vitality, pressed both his opponent's shoulders to the mat and gained the second fall and the match in 6:45.

LEAVE PITCHERS ALONE.

President Armour of Toledo Club Gives Sound Advice.

"If a manager derricked a pitcher when the fans wanted him to, he wouldn't have a man on the throwing staff fit for duty. Every one of them would lose his nerve. Nobody would have confidence, and without confidence a pitcher is no good."

So declared President Armour of the Toledo team. The hangers-on at the baseball office were discussing the freedom with which bleacherites and grandstand folk, too, noisily proclaim their desires to have a pitcher removed from the box.

"It's a wonderful thing, this confidence," said Armour. "The ordinary pitcher who makes good can stand the racket from the crowd if he has confidence in himself and he knows that his manager has confidence in him.

"Several years ago, during a game in Philadelphia, a now celebrated pitcher was working in the box. He hadn't won a game in five weeks, and he was doing his level best to break the hoodoo. Things went along nicely for seven innings, and then the batters began to 'get to him.' The man who was manager sent out another pitcher to warm up, and when the fellow in the box finished the inning he walked to the bench and took off his playing shoes.

"'What's the matter?' the manager asked.

"'What's the matter?' asked the player. 'How do you suppose I'm going to win if you're going to derrick me? I won't pitch another inning. I can't win. Put in the new man.'

"'You get those shoes on and pitch,' the manager told him, and the twirler went back into the box and finally won out.

"That was a case of a veteran pitcher, but the thought that he was going to be derricked made him feel that the manager had lost confidence in him, and he was ready to quit.

"I witnessed that incident and it made a great impression on me. It taught me to figure that it's hard enough for a pitcher to think the fans have lost confidence in him without knowing that the manager has.

"I think it's a pretty wise stunt to be careful about derricking pitchers. Just because a man gets a few bumps is no reason why he should be yanked out. A man never becomes a pitcher until he has been under hot fire and has been given a chance to show what he can do at critical points. It's that kind of experience that makes a twirler."
