MUSIC.

All over the musical world, the name of Stanislaus Rosini has recently been remembered and his memory honored, for his centenary has been observed in most of the great musical centres.

Rosini was born on the 29th of February, 1792, and brought up amid the most contagious of musical influences. He was, as one of his biographers says, the son of a town trumpeter and an operatic singer of inferior rank, and "as a child attended the itinerant people in their visits to fairs and musical gatherings, and was in danger at the age of seven of becoming a thoroughgoing little vagabond, when maternal care trusted his education to the friendly hands of the music-master, Pistelli."

The world of art has acknowledged the charm and fascination of Rosini's dazzling music, and the average unscientific reader is also fully familiar with the symphonies that have been taken to his heart despite all criticism. It remains a joy and charm. Wagner and Rossini in their writings have both endeavored to influence, and admitted that they often yielded themselves to its fascinating delight.

It is from Rossini's early home that come the most interesting accounts of his centennial honors.

Pesaro, which has for its chief distinction the fact that it was the birthplace of Rossini, was the scene of festivities. Bernardo Tasso and his immortal son, Torquato Tasso, once lived here, the latter writing some of his immortal verse in this rather uninteresting town.

Pesaro observed the Rossini centennial with musical fêtes, lyrical concerts, a performance of "William Tell," competitions for local and foreign musicians, and the purchase of the house in which the composer was born, intending to convert it into a Rossini Museum.

Venice gave operatic representations and a wake carnival.

Turin had an elaborate performance of the "Stabat Mater."

Paris observed the centenary by a revival of "William Tell."

PATTI'S FIRST PUBLIC APPEARANCE.

The following good story is told about Adelina Patti in the Denver News:

"The entire Patti family were born musicians, and the little daughters were gifted with beautiful voices, but Adelina had a wonderful ear in addition to her little silvery voice, and could repeat the songs of Jenny Lind and Patti, and, after hearing them only a few times, in perfect time and tune. Mademoiselle Patti was selected as one of the little children of 'Norma,' and persisted at rehearsal in singing the music of 'Mira Norma' to the duet between Norma and Adalgisa, between mother and sister, and when, after several admonitions, the child continue to sing, her mother would give her a spanking in the presence of the orchestra and the company."

Adelina has been better rewarded in later years for singing the fury cause phrase.

THE U. S. MILITARY BAND.

The coming of the United States Marine Band to Salt Lake on April 2 is a musical event of importance. When the organization have made a similar tour as stopped out they will have traveled between 800 and 900 miles in 42 days, and appeared every day, except Sundays, in grand military concerts, afternoon and evening. The average travel for the tour will be 200 daily. The band will also nightly sing, with Phillip Sousa directing and Miss Marie Dorcas as the soprano, an American prima, who was great favorite in Europe upon appearing her studies in Paris two years ago. She is a native of Washington, D. C.

NEXT WEEK AT THE THEATRE.

The first three nights, the Kimball Opera Comique company, headed by Corlane, will present a spectacular operatic burlesque, "Carmen up to Date." The piece has recently undergone some revision both as to dialogue and music. The company surrounding Corlane is described as a strong one. Selma Orpha, the baritone, has a leading role. The costumes worn by the actress are said to be the identical ones that were designed by Felix and Worth of Paris, for Simon Adam's proposed production of Bizet's opera.

MISS HAZE.

The three remaining evenings of the week and Saturday matinee are reserved for Miss Haze, who will be remembered, first as leading lady for Lawrence Barrett and then in the support of the Booth-Barrett combination. A beautiful woman, Miss Haze has received Gordon Clarke, a nephew of Booth. The engagement will open with "Romeo and Juliet," followed by a change of bill each evening.

THE THEATRE ATTACHES' BALL.

The friends of the employes at the Salt Lake Theatre assembled there last night to the number of about three hundred to enjoy the ball. The affair was a delightful one, everything being arranged with tasteful elegance. The business ball this afternoon is well attended, it lasts till 11 o'clock tonight.

WONDERLAND.

Manager Day seems always to be able to give the public of patronizing home productions most satisfactory, nevertheless and a note of interest that can be procured, and generally he succeeds. In a way that gives evidence of his taste and genius. This week is an exceptionally interesting one at Wonderland. The Iroquinsa family with their dog, cats, ponies and other unpleasantry, is both pleasant and instructive, and the tricks at Dr. Waite are indeed interesting. The sixth company are doing some good work as usually, but the piece selected is of very little dramatic value.

BRIEF PARAGRAPHS.

A performance which cannot be equalled at any other theatre in the country: "The greatest contortionist excites strikes the lowest!" "The most accomplished artist!" "The greatest success of the past decade!" "Unmistakable! Irrepressible! Irresistible! Irreducible! Unparalleled in humanity in extraordinary!" "Delicious nonsense!"

These are specimens of beauties of theatrical advertisements. The question is, do the advertisers expect the public to believe them?

H. B. Jacobs, the theatrical manager, is organizing a company with a capital of $1,000,000, the object of which will be the establishment of a temple to be called the "Arena." This is to be located near the World's Fair Exposition grounds and will be intended to exhibit the national games of all nations. A day is to be given to each game, and representatives of all nations will be invited to compete for prizes. The sports of antiquity will also be introduced, such as chariot racing and gladiatorial combats. The project is a novel one.

FANCIES ON A WELL KNOWN AIR.

Oh, some a Paderewski
Which some rather wish was a little less
The tone is good, the touching
Is not to said or clear;
For some prefer with the piano
Is just a little too much.
Some like the music simple, some prefer it complicated,
And some like it between.

Notice to the music simple to play it, and it is the easiest performance in the world.

A writer in the Meet represents the "metropolitan critics" to be erstwhile reporter, who strives his space between notices of new plays and impertinent and useless gossip about members of the profession."

In spite of the remarkable success Henrik Ibsen's plays are being given in all quarters of the globe, and the modern playwright can boast of having his plays translated into Swedish, Danish, Russian, German, French, Spanish, Hungarian, Italian and English.

The result of the New York World's prize play contest has been decided. Twelve thousand plays were competed for a piece entitled "Madge" has won the prize. Its author is W. Ernest Golden, whose story, Grace Greene, is well known singer of the New York Church Eight. Other plays were praised by the committee. The manuscripts were read by Dodet Prohman, A. M. Palmer, Charles Barnard, Augustus Thomas and William Seymour. Each committeeman has reported, and the general opinion seems to be that the pieces were of a low order of merit, most of them showing no familiarity with the stage.

Next summer a Russian structure will give a great set or three entertainment at Coney Island. It is to be laid representing the battle of Plevna, fought by the Russian and Turkish troops.

FIGHTING WITH A BABOON

A Man's Desperate Hand to Hand Battle with a Monster Anthropoid.

I was walking through the lands and had my gun with me, and the animal were feeding on the top of the rocky precipice that overhung my homestead. The dogs in the farmyard, on hearing the noise the baboons were making, collected up to the precipice and were soon engaged in a deadly fight. I took up my gun and climbed to the homestead, for the purpose of assisting the dogs and in the hope of saving them from being torn to pieces. When I reached the summit of the rocks a number of baboons fled. I fired and exclaimed aloud to the dogs, "Ye are successfully pursued and tackled by the only dog left, the others lately been torn to pieces. The struggle for life or death was taking place between the wounded baboon and the dog on the very brink of a precipice. I had no time to load my gun, so I put it down and picked up a wondered blue stone and walked to within a few paces of the spot.

I was just in the act of tearing out of them at the baboon when suddenly I remember male baboon, the largest I have seen, came toddling at me in a bold and defiant manner, his eyes gleaming with anger and his huge jaws working together as if in anticipation of the crunching that was to come for me. I just had time to hurl the stone in my more upraised hand at him when he was upon me. I felt the sharp edge of the stone and felt as with such violence that I thought every bone in my body was smashed to atoms. I blinked with all my might, I tried to get hold of a stone, but I felt the brute was on me. I felt the hot breath of the brute, and felt the sharp teeth bite my cheek. I felt my arms pinned down with the hot breath of the brute, and felt the strength of the enraged African mandrill overpowered me completely.

After he had finished with my leg he raised himself on his hind legs, put his arm round me and raised half of upon the chest with his powerful paws. Which could I do? Every one and then he felt go his hold of my throat and nearly cut my throat. I seized him by the throat with my right hand and clinched my fingers, but he would not yield his grip for a single moment. Every time I moved he dragged me nearer to the edge of the precipice, and he was soon so close to them that I could feel the ground slipping down to it. I knew that if I for a moment lost my hold down we should go into the chasm below. The wounded baboon had to drag that over the remarkable force of awful pressure to which I now found myself, and we rolled over into the chasm. We had lost as it beauty as now, and as the baboon allowed to slipping of attention to I felt I should had the slide to hold, and the Lamper, as I was so old man, considerably over sixty.

At the angle I helpmeight myself of a pocketfile I had in my waistcoat pocket. It would only get it out I might cut him off by stabbing him in the face. I eventually got my left hand into my pocket and got the knife, the brute scratching and tearing my face with his nails all the while. I got it to my mouth and held it there till I had an opportunity of opening it with my left hand. I then began stabbing and pressing him, but the knife was not large enough to do him much damage. Little blood, however, the sight of which only made him more furious still. By this time I had matted a vestiges of clothing off, and my bare feet felt the effect of what a south African baboon can do when he chooses to tackle and fight an unarmed man.

I was wondering how all this was going to end, when one of the dogs that had been wounded in the fight and had recovered sufficiently to make his way to where we were round the animal from behind. Held the brute worked to get at the dog. He threw himself from me upon the dog, they had one rough and tumble, and then the baboon walked sullenly away along the ridge of the precipice, looking back from time to time as if undecided whether he should renew the attack. It was some time before I could recover sufficient strength to descend the mountain. I got home, however, and the dog too, after an encounter such as I shall never forget, and the like of which I hope never to experience again.—Great Round Advertiser.

Great Publicity Demonstrable.

In the Australian wing of the Hamilton trade there was one who could speak from personal experience as to the advantages of an advertisement. He had seen the wonders and were of the others, and many were the wonders which he related to other traveling men. He is retired of late, and, with his home in Hull and his wife and children in Leeds, he has to go on the road for a living. He was in Leeds the other day, and he said to a friend, "Here is the 20 and one years I have been in the trade I never had a chance to go to Hull before, and I shall go to Hull and spending the speed of the Leeds people." He was not the first man who has found out the advantages of a well-worded advertisement, and, with the Leeds people, he found out a product worth proper to guard and which was then made in Hull. Hull is so simple for the Leeds people to go to Hull, and the Hull people to come to Leeds.—Hamilton Times, New York Ledger.
