EVENING SESSION.

The Nomination of Vice President Postponed Till Today.

GEN. BRAGG ENTERS A PROTEST.

The Disappointed Crowds Reluctantly Leave the Hall and the Entertainment.

CHICAGO, July 10.—The crowds thronged the Coliseum tonight in anticipation of another oratorical display such as they listened to last night. They were doomed to disappointment, as the leaders had decided, after consultation, not to proceed with the nomination of the Vice President tonight. But, all unconscious of their determination, the public pushed on to their places in the galleries.

At 8:15, Chairman White, by dint of much rapping, managed to bring the convention to order. After making a formal announcement, General Bragg of Wisconsin appeared on the stage to make a personal explanation. The old veteran, with grizzled beard, who made at least Democratic conventions in the past to a high pitch of enthusiasm, received no ovation tonight. He came to enter a protest.

"I rise on a question of state privileges," he began, and reminded the Southern members that they knew what that meant.

Some gentlemen, he complained, had during the last session, in the absence of the delegation for consultation, stolen the state colors and joined in the Bryan parade, and he wished to cut the record right by having it understood "that we traded not the Wisconsin badger tonight the candidate of the majority of this convention."

Hisses and a few cheers followed this sentiment stated, and the chairman declared that he would entertain no factional questions, and introduced Gov. Stone of Missouri.

"The work so far done by this convention has been so well done that it will meet the enthusiastic and instant approval of the nation," he began. "A very important work was yet to be done," he continued, and in order that no mistakes should be made in the selection of a vice president, he moved an adjournment until 12 o'clock tomorrow. This was changed to 10, and with great confusion on the floor, a roll call was commenced and began. Connecticut and Indiana were the first states to vote no. The Illinois delegates stirred at the chair with appealing shouts when their state was called, and finally F. P. Morris shouted, in order that no mistake be made, "Illinois votes that the convention be adjourned until tomorrow." The thousands of spectators took the negative side of the question, for they did not want to lose the night's entertainment for which they had come so far. Both at every response of "yes" they sent up a wildly enthusiastic outlook of approval.

When it became against the motion would carry, the thousands of spectators began to scramble out, filling the hall with a muddy uproar, and the chairman grew red in the face, hammering with his mallet and yelling, "Sit down! Sit down!" The spectators were opposed by the information that their seats would be good tomorrow, and at 9:30 the convention was adjourned.

TELLER AND HIS FRIENDS.

The Latter Disappointed, but the Former is Satisfied.

CHICAGO, July 10.—The silver Republicans who have been waiting to nominate Senator Teller were disappointed at the result, and as yet have not determined upon a line of action. They assembled at their headquarters at the Great Northern hotel soon after the nomination was announced, those present being Senator Dubois of Idaho, Pettigrew of South Dakota, Cannon of Utah and Mantle of Montana; Representatives Towne of Minnesota, Hartman of Montana, Foulkrod of Colorado and Newlands of Nevada.

The meeting was held behind closed doors, and the district secretary was joined. It was agreed that no statement be made and that in case of policy should be announced until a personal conference could be had with Senator Teller, now at Pueblo, who is expected in the morning after the adjournment.

While avoiding public statements, the leading Republicans cannot conceal the deep chagrin they feel at the unexpected turn of events. They say the convention was swept off its feet by the sudden wave of sentimental enthusiasm, and they predict that the enthusiasm will die out after its first impulses are spent. They believe that if either contests had preceded Teller might have been nominated and the enthusiasm made on the silver issue, would be wanting in the direct questions.

TELLER APPROVES THE NOMINATION.

TOPEKA, Kan., July 10.—Senator Teller on being informed of the Associated Press, after receiving numerous telegrams from his silver colleagues regarding a conference, which will probably be held at Denver.

"What do you think of Mr. Bryan's nomination?"

"I consider the nomination an exceedingly strong one," said the senator. "Bryan is an able man, of high character, a strong friend of silver and close to the people. He will make an excellent President."

"Do you think he can secure the support of the silver men who left the St. Louis convention?"

"The men who left the St. Louis convention," replied Mr. Teller, "will make the silver question paramount in all others. It is not a question of politics with them but of principle. I am not at liberty to speak for them at this time, as I have received several telegrams concerning a conference to be held within a day or two, and asking me to withhold my expression of their views until after such conference."

EVERYBODY PLEASED.

Back Home Receives the News of Bryan's Nomination.

CANTON, Ohio, July 10.—National Chairman Mark Hanna, Hon. John Sherman and Congressman Tale, guest of Buffalo reached Canton today and were met at the station by Governor McKinley's carriage. Arriving at McKinley's home, they found the governor receiving telegraph reports of the nomination of the Chicago convention. News of Bryan's nomination was received with very little enthusiasm in Canton; this was all the more noticeable from the fact of the city's wild enthusiasm which prevailed here the nomination of Harrison's convention. Governor McKinley was at the time taking with National Chairman M. A. Hanna. One of the newspaper men carried to him a telegraphic bulletin announcing the result. Gov. McKinley did not care to talk politics or talk of politics, and strongly advised the news was received he was in receipt of numerous telegrams of congratulation. He then retired to his study and took the reins to drive Mesrs. Hanna, Sherman and Tale to the station, where Mr. Hanna declined to make any statement as to the personnel of the executive committee, which he will probably announce next Wednesday. He spoke as if pleased over the Chicago result.

BOAND GLAD IT IS OVER.

LEBANON, Mo., July 10.—Within five minutes after the bulletin announcing Bryan's nomination at Chicago was posted, R. P. Bland was receiving congratulations of his many friends with a smile on his face which vanished quickly enough rather than disappointment. In conversation with an Associated Press representative he strongly indorsed Mr. Bryan, both as a statesman and silverman, and declared his entire satisfaction with the result of the convention's work. He knows nothing as yet concerning the influence that contributed to his defeat, nor does he appear to care. He is for Bryan as the nominee of his party, and on grounds of personal friendship. His friends here are sorely disappointed.

HE WILL GO ON THE STUMP.

LEBANON, Mo., July 10.—In a dispatch sent out by Mr. Bland after the nomination he said: "The nominee of the convention is a very able and worthy man. He is fully informed on the silver question, and his whole heart and soul are in the cause. All of his sympathies are with the people. If he is elected, he will carry out the platform, and I have no doubt that he will sweep the country in November.

"I want to say that I heartily believe the platform and the candidates. Whatever I can do to insure the election of Mr. Bryan will be done when the time comes. I will go on the stump and will assist otherwise."

PRESS COMMENTS.

The New York World Indulges in Strong Language.

NEW YORK, July 10.—The World in its editorial on the Democratic nomination will say: "Money having dictated the platform, it was perhaps natural that dynamite should write the candidates. The nomination of a 'boy orator' for the White House at the behest of the nation's affairs, domestic and foreign, when the direst experiences, the best wisdom, the broadest patriotism and the greatest executive ability are required, rather particularly near taking the one that may bring the sublime."

"It is to the future that the World looks in considering the effect of this convention. Care is no longer in the result of the election, except as to the size of McKinley's majority and electoral majorities. To question this is to doubt the intelligence, the underlying honesty and the public morality of the people.

"The Democratic party, if not hopelessly disrupted, will be the natural rallying point for the rending against a Republican rival in goods, a favorable tariff, which is sure to follow the election of McKinley."

The Journal will say: "It is just to say that if there be reason for grave objection to the platform adopted by the Chicago convention, there can be none urged against the personal character of the Presidential nominee.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., July 10.—In an editorial tomorrow, which concludes with an appeal for the nomination of another Democrat for President, the Courier Journal will say: "The league of the silver men who went to work several months ago to capture the organization of the Democratic party have accomplished their purpose. They have put forth, in the Democratic name, a platform whose mission every cardinal Democratic tenet, and have nominated as the Democratic leader a young man who has recently abandoned the Democracy for the Populist party. And such a radical reversion of every life principle of the Democracy will be followed by those Democrats whose subserviency to party platform is not dictated by their desire to share in the official spoils of party success, whose fealty to party organization means fidelity to the views for the advancement of which the party is the only instrument."

The Commercial (Republican): "Mr. Bryan got his seat in the convention by virtue of a vote reversing the action of his state convention and of the national committee of his party. He is the most inexperienced and untried man ever nominated for the Presidency by one of the great national parties."

DENVER, Col., July 10.—The Republican tomorrow will say of the Democratic nominee: "If he lives up to his political planks of the platform on which he was nominated, the West, at least, will be entirely satisfied with his administration."

The Rocky Mountain News (Populist) will editorially endorse the Democratic platform as a most radical Populistic document. Of the candidate it says: "A man of pure private life, of spotless character, of varied talents, of the noblest ambition, voters of all parties may give him their support and serve well themselves and their country by the service."

BALTIMORE, July 10.—The Sun and the Evening News, both democratic strongly Democratic, will not support Bryan in the coming campaign. The Sun will say tomorrow: "The only question that now presents itself to the sound money men is, 'How to beat Bryan?' He is the best man the free coinage people could have nominated, a brilliant speaker and an effective campaigner, he fills the platform, and the Chicago platform fills him. The sound money, however, are in favor of McKinley and sound money, regardless of the evils of inflation."

The News-Leader editorial today says: "There is no cause for regret today or the day of seeing that the Chicago idea of Democracy is turned as deep as possible next November."

THE FOREIGN VIEW.

LONDON, July 10.—The Daily Graphic in an editorial receives the decision of the Chicago convention as "more than ever of a certain contingency, as it will make the Presidential election a conflict of choice between the two evils of protection on the hand, and available and free silver on the other. The outlook for the United States is black, indeed."

The Daily Gazette thinks that the Democratic prospects are better than some people think. "For," it says, "another term of McKinley will give great impetus to the Democratic platform."

The Times editorial says: "The selection of Mr. Bryan was not a wise one, because he has shown himself the most powerful advocate of the policy to which the convention had committed itself. What, however, must we think of a party which does not give offence to such stuff as his speech, and to who listens to it with unanimous approval? He knows his hearers and sums himself to their intellectual capacity. When Mr. Smalley says that he believes Mr. Bryan to be sincere, it is only at the expense of his intelligence and good sense that we can accept this vindication of his political morality."

The editorial in the Standard (Conservative) says: "The Democrats have committed suicide so far as the immediate contest is concerned. The party has immolated itself upon the altar of silver. Herein is the great danger to American finance. Only by skillful and unprincipled manipulation did Mr. Hanna save the Republican party from disruption on the same question, and to lose the next presidential election the controlling heavy may have worked itself so deeply into men's minds that a free silver President will be inevitable."

The standard, after congratulating President Cleveland upon his friends' firm stand for honest money, proceeds to salute the gallant leadership of Mr. Hinkyman for English manufacturers.

The Daily News says editorially: "Mr. Bryan resembles his famous countryman who said of eternal punishment, 'The people will never stand it.' Mr. Bryan's creed will appear nonsense to an educated reader, but he is a perfect logical timebeater. It is almost a pity that he has not a better chance. But Mr. McKinley is sound on money and is almost sure to win."

BRYAN HEARS THE NEWS

And Makes the Announcement That He Will Not Submit to a Second Term.

CHICAGO, July 10.—Mr. Bryan received the announcement of his nomination with all the composure and calmness of a man who had seen and heard things during a longer life than his. His features did not even quiver slightly more than ordinarily. When the Associated Press bulletin carrying the nomination message was handed him, he simply smiled a smile in which there was no evidence of surprise or elation. He was at the time sitting chatting with two newspaper friends of his in the parlors of the Clifton house.

"I," said he, "this is true, I want to say that I believe I have a better time than in contemplation in the immediate future."

He then turned to the parlor table and with a lead pencil wrote on a scrap of soft paper supplied by one of the newspaper friends the following:

To the American People—In order that I may have no excuse but to declare definitely the duties of the office, I desire to announce that if called upon I will not be a candidate for a second term.

W. J. BRYAN.

The news in the meantime had become generally known, and the rather confined room of the Clifton was completely filled by the time the former had allowed his stenographer-secretary to leave the financial chair. There were cheers and calls for a speech when he appeared in the corridor of the hotel. Taking a stand on the stairway, Mr. Bryan said:

"My friends, I know you I am extremely grateful for the great compliment which I am assured has been paid me by the Democratic National convention. It is, of course, remote to its own whether the nomination is a honor or an honorable one. For my part, I do not know. This will, of course, be determined by the contest, which will be decided at the polls next November, when it will be known not only whether I shall be elected or defeated, but incidentally more important than that, whether the cause of silver shall honor or win. I will only add that I hope those who accept the views of the Democratic platform which was reiterated and upheld will lose no opportunity to influence the result in the interest of the doctrine therein enunciated. I thank you for the manifestation of your indorsement.

The brief speech was received with a loud and generous burst of applause and a demand for an upper utility to shake hands with the new candidate. An impromptu reception followed for about twenty minutes, at the foot of the stairway. The reception concluded, Mr. Bryan returned to his private room, where he said to an Associated Press reporter:

"There is nothing I care to say more than I have said in the brief speech I have given out in regard to a second term. I may add in explanation of this statement that it was not in my mind at a sudden impulse, but I have had in mind the propriety of making such an announcement ever since I was regarded the nomination as a probability. I believe it to be a good principle. The Presidency is the highest honor that can be bestowed by this country upon a human being, and the power of the office is so great that there ought to be no temptation to the man occupying the office to use it for his own advancement. My declaration is not misprecedented. Mr. Cleveland in his first letter of acceptance set forth the objection of a second term in language so forcible that it cannot be surpassed. President Hayes advocated an amendment to the Constitution making subsets of the Presidential office ineligible for re-election, and a similar amendment was suggested by Andrew Jackson.

"I have also in express my deep appreciation of the kindness shown me by other candidates and their friends, and say to say that I conduct my campaign free to personal criminalness which surround this campaign, and free to any injurious acts of my own. In fact, had the convention concerned who was the man concerning, the result would have fallen to another.

"I can only add that I so highly appreciate the responsibility imposed on me by nomination that I have avoided making any pledges to persons."

NO CAMPAIGN PLANS.

Mr. Bryan said, in reply to questions that he had not only made no plans for the campaign, but that he had not even mentioned when he would return to his home in Nebraska. He said if he would make any speeches during the campaign, he replied he had not an opportunity to consider what he would say, and would not say.

Mr. Bryan made an open-air speech from the balcony of the Clifton house tonight, addressing a vast crowd, which filled Monroe street from State street to Wabash avenue. The Blues etc., headed by their band, marched to the Clifton hotel and serenaded the new Democratic nominee. The band cheer for Bryan and demands for a speech followed. Mr. Bryan in the balcony, where he was cheered again and again.

He was followed by two men bearing an enormous American flag. As the crowd counted and the band played, the big flag was thrown to the breeze and finally thrown about the shoulders of the candidate. He smilingly acknowledged the plaudits from below, and, pushing back the flag from his shoulders, addressed the crowd below.

"There shall be no sign of 'Keep off the grass' when you come around, boys," he began good naturedly, to the jeering crowd below. Then he asked: "Is this the Bland club?"

A yell in the affirmative answered his query.

"Then I want to say to the friends of Bland that if the convention had chosen as their nominee the man whose name is inscribed on your banner, he would have had no more loyal supporter than I. The fact that he was not chosen cannot be taken as the slightest reflection upon his great ability. No man was more deserving of the convention's vote, he honors and the confidence than Richard Pete Bland."

Another great shout went up from the crowd and for several minutes the speaker could not proceed. When quiet was again restored, he went on:

"But circumstances sometimes contribute to great results, and I think circumstances contributed much in the shaping of the convention. When the campaign is over I think it can be said a mistake has been made. But it depends upon the point of view. Abraham Lincoln once said that the Lord loved plain people because he made so many of them. I was in this great fight it will be because the plain people believe that we will bring to them what we want equal justice. We raise no pecuniary tax but due according to intelligence and education, but we hold that when the government comes in contact with the people there must be equal and exact justice to all alike, rich and poor, great and humble. [Great applause.]

THE PARAMOUNT ISSUE.

"The issue of this campaign is the money question. [Long continued applause.] And we cannot be driven from our stand by the charge that we advocate dishonest money. The honest and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, independent of any nation on the face of the globe, will not give us dishonest money. It will not give us a dollar worth one value to one man and another value to another man. It will give to the man who lends the money, the same value that he lends it for, and to the man who holds the mortgage, [Great applause.] It will give us a coin that will wear prosperity. This is to be a fighting campaign, and you, my friends, are to do the fighting. Some years ago I wrote a story of a man who could not stand because the man in the room above walked the floor all night.

"At last the man below, in desperation, called his friend above why he continued to walk the floor the man the night. The friend replied: 'Come down and fix our next week, I think about it and sleep.'

"'But,' the friend replied, 'are you not making a mistake? Why don't you go to sleep and let the other man do the walking?'"

There was laughter and applause at the old story, to which the nominee gave a new interpretation, as he continued:

"Now a great many people seem to think that the candidate must do all the walking the floor, all the fighting, but this is your fight. It is more important to the people that they select their officers than it is to the candidates that they should meet themselves. It is for you to say who your lifted man will be. The officers of the people are their servants.

"Why should you not be careful in selecting the man who serves you in a public capacity. When you give care to selecting those who serve you in a private capacity? I want you to go home and feel that this cause is your cause. It is the cause of the people, the plain people. If we fight as we should we shall win. I thank you, my friends."

Mr. Bryan bowed and stepped back, and a cheer went up which echoed and re-echoed through the narrow street as he was taken up and conducted for a block to other streets.
