More Lying.—In last evening's issue of an alleged newspaper called the Democrat appears the following:

DEATH OF WILLIAM JENNINGS.

ONE OF UTAH'S MOST PROMINENT CITIZENS PAYS THE DEBT OF NATURE AFTER ENDURING MUCH PHYSICAL SUFFERING.

Few names have been more conspicuous in Utah's history than that of Hon. William Jennings, whose death, from some disease just has elapsed, a feeling of profound sadness, which was not confined by any means to his family circle, and which reached its culmination point at 10 to-day, when his death was announced.

News was borne by means of the telephone and otherwise to various parts of the city. His health has not been good for five years past, having suffered from rheumatism and the effects of a fall, but the immediate cause of his death was diabetes mellitus. He had a spell of severe illness last fall, at which time it was feared that he would not recover, but he afterwards became convalescent, and the day before Christmas he was out driving. He, however, suffered a relapse immediately afterwards, and has been confined to his bed ever since, and much of the time has endured the most excruciating pain.

Last evening the pain ceased, and at about 10 p.m. he sank into a comatose condition, from which he never rallied. The deceased was the son of Isaac and Jane Thompson Jennings, and was born at Yardley, near Birmingham, Worcestershire, England, on September 13, 1823. His father was one of the claimants of the famous Jennings chancery suit, involving several million pounds sterling, but the proverbial difficulty of getting a suit out of chancery when it once gets in prevented him from recovering what was lawfully his. Isaac Jennings was a wealthy butcher, and his son William followed in his footsteps, and was successful in his business, his delicate constitution and disinclination to engage in scholastic studies preventing him from attaining the fine boarding school education accorded to his five brothers and five sisters. He early devoted his attention to agriculture, and a spirit of enterprise that led him to look for a broader field in which to operate than the limits of the "tight little isle" afforded.

In 1847 he accordingly migrated to America, landing in the country with but little means, and for some time afterwards engaged as a pork packer in New York, at $6 per week. From there he went to Ohio, and thence to St. Joseph, Mo., at which latter place he fell sick, and in some latter day papers and in the year 1851 returned one of them, a Miss Jane Walker, and through this marriage was led to come to Utah in 1853, although not at that time a member of the church.

Having an eye to business, he invested his surplus means, before starting, in a stock of groceries, which sold readily and at good figures after his arrival here, and enabled him to merge the butchery business shortly afterwards with a little capital. His success from that time up to the present in his various undertakings in the commercial and manufacturing line has been such that for many years past he has been regarded as the wealthiest man among the Latter-day Saints and perhaps in the Territory—a real millionaire.

Having embraced the Gospel, soon after he came to Utah, he filled a mission to Carson Valley in the year 1850, from which he returned the following year. Since that time he has been engaged extensively as a merchant, and became one of the original organizers of the Utah Central and Utah Southern railroads, of the first of which he was for many years the vice-president, and of the other president. He also served as a legislator, for several years as the superintendent of Z. C. M. I., and as mayor of Salt Lake City between 1853 and 1854, all of which positions he filled with marked ability. At the time of his death he held the office of vice-president of Z. C. M. I., vice-president and director of the Deseret National Bank, and director of the C. R. R.

He leaves a large family, having a wife, 14 children and 9 grand-children living. His son William, who for some time past has been a student at Harvard College, was telegraphed for last night and started home immediately. He is expected to reach here Tuesday. A daughter of the deceased, Mrs. Jane Eldredge, who lives in Idaho, has also been sent forward and will probably arrive to-morrow evening. Until they arrive the time for the funeral cannot be ascertained.

Out of respect for the distinguished deceased the House branch of the Legislative Assembly, the Speaker of which, Hon. Wm. W. Ritter, is a son-in-law of Mr. Jennings, adjourned immediately after convening to-day until Monday, the 16th inst., on account of the principal business houses are placed at half-price.

Mr. Jennings was a man of many sterling qualities, who wielded a great influence in this community, and whose death will leave a void that can not easily be filled.
