MR. CARLISLE'S LETTER.

Secretary Carlisle writes a long letter which appears in full in today's News, the general drift of which is a defense of his financial policy and presumably a bid for the Presidential nomination by the Chicago convention. It begins with a statement which will be considered somewhat refreshing in the far West, that he has always treated the gold and silver money of the country precisely alike, but has bestowed the greater effort upon silver. Perhaps from the secretary's standpoint this is strictly true, but the claim of good treatment to a captive waif by a hostile captor may in the same way be true and the recipient of the impartial treatment still believe, and with good cause, that a little less of such kindness would be more appreciated.

The people of this part of the world do not, except in a very few instances, pretend to be posted on the intricacies and general derangement of the science of finance as practically applied, or at all. They do know that a hundred dollars of standard money will effect a deal or pay a debt to that extent, and they know further that the government has a monopoly in the matter of coinage and establishment of legal tender. They also know that for several years last past there has been such a diminution in the visible volume of currency that values of all kinds have steadily shrunk and transactions of whatever nature beyond the common affairs of every day life have become harder and harder to bring about. The cause of the last two conditions they attribute to the first one, that as when there is a drought they charge it up to a lack of rain, or when a house or a tree is blown down they know that the air has been on a rampage, Mr. Carlisle expositions would not be so blunt as this, but would go back to the origin of things and give us an explanation which might or might not make the matter plainer—the chances generally favoring the latter proposition.

So with the general understanding of Secretary Carlisle's ownership of the treasury department of the government. It was quite necessary to restrict the output and circulation of what can reasonably be regarded as the money that is most used in our ordinary transactions—silver—in order that the fiat of 1890, supplemental of the edict of 1873, placing the nation upon the single gold standard, might be successfully carried out. It is the same in the field of statecraft as it is in the other affairs of life, that effects can only be the result of causes, and there could be no single standard even in theory if there were an unrestricted double at command in actual practice. Of course, therefore, the secretary has only carried out the spirit of his interpretation of the law, and in so doing has no doubt acted conscientiously, but the result has been, as it is inclined to be the wild and woolly region, to close up markets, weaken values everywhere and destroy credit in place, reduce the office of his city every department and throw it out altogether in a mystery of cases, close up a majority of the silver mines and put the others on greatly reduced terms—all because the money that some have been designed by nature and our laws of Constitution to be the "money company" of gold has been robbed and its circulation so restricted that those who would buy and those who would pay their debts have to think several times and resort to greater activity, mental and physical, than ever before, before doing so.

We do not question Mr. Carlisle's integrity or ability; but it is astonishing how people will differ in relation to such things.

CONSCIENCE IN POLITICS.

Being in no sense a party organ, and consequently having no axe to grind, no partisanship more to take care of, no motive to favor and no political interest to subserve, the News can perhaps escape a criticism which others might bring upon themselves in daring to comment a trifle upon purely political acts and issues. With the assurance, therefore, that whatever may be brought of our wisdom, there can be no question of our motives, we take occasion to assert that according to the published reports, the proceedings of a Democratic county committee meeting in Utah county last Saturday were in a good many respects quite discreditable to the dignity of the party and of the good people of that section.

We make no allusion as to the motives of the county chairmanship—that is a matter which the party affected must arrange to suit its own pleasure at its own time and in its own way. The attempt, however, to force a resolution against the party majority in the Legislature, and against the only Democratic member from the county in particular, because of the adverse action of that body on the contested elections coming up from Utah county, must be described as bad taste, bad morals and bad politics.

At the time the House of Representatives by overwhelming vote refused to unseat Mr. Tomlinson in favor of Mr. Bringhurst, and at the time the other disputed elections from Utah county were even more decisively decided in favor of the sitting members, this paper took great pleasure in commending the courage and justice of the majority party, which by rising above partisanship and acting in accordance with the honest dictates of conscience, gave welcome evidence to the people of Utah that there was still such a thing as honor in politics. We applauded the event as a veritable red letter occurrence in the political calendar, and if we did not then say so, we thought, and intended to say, that the action of Mr. Thorne, the one Utah County Republican member, was especially deserving of approval, for nobody can dispute that his course was high-minded, brave and commendable. Yet his associates in general and he in particular were made the objects of a severe attack at the meeting referred to, when it was sought, under an impulse which we cannot regard as other than impertinent and offensively partisan, to put upon them the stigma of censure and lack of confidence.

The News, in closing its allusion to the incident, only desires to say that it will be a sad day for the people of Utah if their legislature shall come to consider as the highest duty blindly to follow the lead to party bosses, to dance to the music of political huckesters, and to cringe under the party lash. Such subserviency is a trait which we hope and pray will never characterize the elected representatives of this people. Unworthy and incapable men may find their way into office, and even the brightest minds will sometimes err. But there is yet times more safety in the ignorance or the blunders of an honest man than in the abject bending of a political coward or bigoted. Party managers will do well to heed the challenges and throw the weight of their influence on the right side. The News announces here and now its determined antagonism to the other side, and will oppose it in whatever party it may develop. And the News is not yet without some influence among the people of Utah!

MYTH AND REALITY.

We cannot but feel that a great many otherwise sober-minded men are losing their head in their search for precious metals and in the attempt to get rich without working much for it. The News has already given the advice that this inclination should be restrained, and that instead of rushing off pell-mell into mining camps or running over the hills as prospectors, men with families would do far better and more out rather at the end of one, two, five or ten years as the case may be, if they would place themselves upon a little piece of ground—leased or rented ground if no personal ownership can be secured—and get into close touch with mother nature and the soil. Agriculture in any to mention part of this State introduces a sure return upon the labor invested, and no person need be in doubt as to making a living for himself and family if he uses ordinary thrift. This not at all sound where men want time, labor and means to chase a will-o'-the-wisp, especially when that deceptive thing is concealed beneath the earth's stone surface and is only tantalize, when at all, in narrow veins and seams which remain forever almost except to the law.

A friend gives us an example of the wildness and folly of much of this prospecting work and the lionling of claims. In a report of a recent prospecting tour up City Creek canyon and along the mountain tops he says: "We found some indications of gold in the Salt Lake City Mining Recorder's office, Room 23 south. Men OF THE PERIOD

Our collection generally prefer our clothing. Such a preference is quite natural in view of the facts. Our Spring suits give the best practical definition of the word "first class" to be found in any clothing house in this part of the State. Business men find themselves best suited when dressed by us. Our stock demonstrates that ready made is the rule of tailor made in every particular. Your fancy tailor with four times the trouble and a much higher price can't beat us.

We understand a single fact out weight a thousand claims. We claim a great deal for our clothing, but the single fact that all we claim is carried out to the letter, is what makes our customers so happy.
