AS ALIKE AS TWO PEAS.

Twin Brothers at Wolverton University Who Can't Be Told Apart.

Arthur and Archer Young of New Britain, twin brothers who are as alike as two copper cents or as the proverbial pea in a pod, entered Wolverton university this autumn in the freshman class, and the difficulty of distinguishing them has led to no end of mistakes. The Young brothers are their father's pride, being in their about 19 years' standing, to become a trifle old.

In college chapel they sit next to each other, and if one of them happens to "cut" the chapel session, whose duty it is to mark absence, he to fix up a card to decide which of them he shall mark absent. Both little men on the varsity football team, and though they are not heavy they have distinguished themselves as being about the smallest players on the eleven. They wear similar mustaches cropped around their very school heads, and their deceptive pelts are also stained with the blue dye of their college. The other day in a practice game the ball was fumbled in a scrimmage, and one of the twins fell on it. Archer was playing half back in the varsity, and Arthur was lined up on the scrub. A cadet at once came to the middle of Chapel Hall to ask which side should have the ball, that fronting, the varsity side, being usually distinguish the twins. Accordingly he ran up to the man who was consulting to his feet with the ball, and called in a loud whisper:

"Say, which Young are you anyhow, varsity or scrub?"

One of the brothers had an entrance condition in some branch of his preparatory work, and a date was set for the special examination. The brother who had the condition marked against him remained in his room, while the other twin took the examination, and passed it with flying colors. This happened because a mistake was made originally in charging the wrong twin with a condition.—Middletown (Conn.) Cor. New York Sun.

HIS STAGE FRIGHT.

The New Czar Acted Like a Dunce and Had to be Helped Out Of Control.

The story of the sudden collapse of an emperor which was brought back to London by the witnesses of the Russian pageants of grief and joy is one of the strangest in the personal histories of great rulers. The members of the British court and the English correspondents who followed the funeral party from Livadia to St. Petersburg saw and heard some interesting things which it was not possible to describe in the dispatches which were sent home.

It is hinted that for several days after the death of Alexander III the members of the Russian court were reduced to despair and distraction by the behavior of the young czar. He was completely unnerved, not so much by grief at his father's death as by his sudden encounter with the new responsibilities of the position. He became for some days a shrinking, cowering weakling. It was almost impossible to coax or spur him into the exercise of any of his imperial functions. Those whose duty it was to prompt him regarding the proper state and other formalities were at their wits' end, and the situation caused the greatest alarm in the court. When some simple course was urged upon him, the young emperor stamp back and begged that he be let alone. He even whimpered when the necessity of action was pressed upon him as imperative. He more than once burst into tears and acted more like a terrified child than the ruler of an empire.

This continued for several days after the arrival of the Prince of Wales, and it was to him that the officials of the Russian court finally appealed. The prince was equal to the occasion, and in the last three weeks he has done more for England than the whole British foreign office would be able to accomplish in a generation. He remained constantly by the young emperor's side. He put heart and courage into him. Before the czar reached St. Petersburg he was transformed. He became more manly, and began to acquire some of the dignity of his rank. He even succeeded his advisers by displaying a marvelously intelligent comprehension of public affairs, with sound if not brilliant powers of judgment.

When the wedding day arrived, he had developed an originality and independence of opinion which further amazed those around him. In other words, the attack of blue funk which at first caused the greatest fears for his capacity to govern has been completely conquered.—London Letter.

DR. PARKER'S CHAWL.

He Tries to Squirm Out of the Charge of Thievery He Made Against Reporters.

The Rev. Dr. Joseph Parker, pastor of the City Temple of London, who in a letter to The Times, denounced as thieves all reporters who printed sermons without consent of the preachers, has climbed down. He has got down to both feet, crave, says a London correspondent. In fact, his attitude now, after writing two more letters on the subject, is much less creditable than when he first gave his most impressive tableau Sydney. In the first letter he said:

"It is right to report sermons without asking the permission of the preacher. It is right to make a living out of another man's brains without compensating him! The preacher earns his livelihood by his sermons, ' etc.

This language is now clear and emphatical, especially when combined with Dr. Parker's assent to his own assertion, contained in manuscript reporter a letter. Not unnecessarily Dr. Parker's letter is used a series of papers among English Schools in regard New Testament Christianity. The Nonconformist conference made things so warm for the pastor of the City Temple that he wrote a second letter to The Times.

The substance of it was simply that he began sinking by his first letter so much a point against the sermonizers which are sure to appear in reports of sermons when they are stolen by the reporter. He now pretended that he left just that anybody should be wicked enough to inquire or hear any other text.

The Times, in discussing the matter, treats this second letter with the scorn it deserves. It says:

"Those views of the claims of the preacher are wholly divergent, unless indeed they are to be harmonized by assuming that the author's idea of the rights of his sermons will be granted only for a consideration. Still we are left in considerable doubt about Dr. Parker's position. Is he concerned only about the importance of the report, or is he anxious about the selling value of his sermons and concerned about reporters' errors only in so far as their correction gives him a chance of boasting of reasonableness? It may apparently become a question whether copyright rests in the man who preaches a sermon or in the congregation which pays him for preaching it. Judging from analogy, we should suppose that to buy a commodity is to subject an article to a different arrangement from that explicitly made beforehand. This, however, is an affair between the preacher and those who pay him to preach.

"In other case we seem to have definit a comfortable distance from the ideals of the early Christian church, and perhaps equally far from the ones upon which all candidates for the rites of walk are still supposed to proceed. The modification of a money charge with a kick price might probably be felt somewhat too complex and abstruse."

Meanwhile the public continues over the subject continues to be very lively.

CLAY COUNTY WINS.

It Beats Stetson With a Plum of Seventy-nine and a Mamma of Seventeen.

With all the deference to General Cassius Marcellus Clay, Clay county claims that it was no Marion county joke a few points better in the matter of an aged groom and a juvenile bride. The allusion is made into this ground was not so old as was General Clay and the bride was not young as Dora, but in things stand Clay county claims the prize.

Over a year ago Colonel P. T. Lynch, past 70, an ex-state senator and a lawyer of some note, married a pretty mountain lass who was just 16. She was his fourth wife, but the colonel's love was as fresh and warm and young as when half a century before he had been made a groom for the first time. A few days ago he was about to make a motion before the judge when a boy of sixty took his hat from his pocket and passed the gentle colonel to block the a straight. Last night there appeared at his house a little Lynch, and the young man was at once named Henry Watterson Lynch and placed in the arms of the Clay County Democratic club.

The present Mrs. Lynch was married after her husband's second wife, for another name being Eliza Lynch Lenefest.—Manchester (Ky.) Cor. Louisville Courier-Journal.

Merely Wanted to Know.

The little girl had been sitting and been caught into the room. Dandine was necessary, and her father, a prominent West side politician, took her into the nursery, gave her a lecture on the sin of lying and confined her minds and thoroughly with soap and water.

"Now, Winifred," he said, with fatherly firmness, as he wiped away her tears, "you will never do the like again, will you, dear?"

"No, papa," promised Winifred, sobbing a sob. "Have you soaped your mouth out, too, the 'bottom, papa?"—Chicago Tribune.

The Difference.

After the recent earthquakes in Greece the Parliament at Athens was examined by a commission to see if it had been injured. The commission now reports that, though the damage to attack it would be well to strengthen the architraves with iron girders and to replace the building from time, which has been causing much pieces of stone to fall are since the Acropolis was destroyed by the Venetians in the fifteenth century.—Philadelphia Press.

Echoes of The Time.

The Zuni village, the district of Cairo, old Vienna and the Dubuque people only came to little closing conditions in the Midway pleasures on Chicago's lake front last week. It seems incredible that they should still have imagined Saltburg a full year after the exposition closed.—Philadelphia Ledger.
