The meeting was called for Taggart's hall, but a few minutes before the hour of commencing, there was such a jam of people that it was not only uncomfortable, but was thought to be dangerous, as the crowd was too much of a strain upon the building. Through request therefor, Bishop M. S. Woolley, of the Twenty-first ward, proposed that the audience adjourn to the Twentyfirst ward meeting house, where they would have ample room. A vote re-sulted in about two-thirds of the people favoring the change of place. The re-maining one-third, representing most of the Henderson supporters, refused to stir and stayed at Taggart's hall.

GEOGHEGAN NOMINATED.

"I did not notice." Miss Clara Cowles, who lived across the street from the Castles, told of see-ing Beardsley enter the house, of Mrs. Moberly and Mrs. Spangler emerging with Jessie Morrison and of the latter struggling to get away. She corroborated the testimony in this respect given yesterday by Mrs. Moberly and Mrs. Spangler

Miss Cowles testified that she found bloody razor near Mrs. Castles's knees.

John Dally, a boy, testified, that he met Jessie Morrison on the morning of the tragedy just outside the Castle gate and that she was going toward the Cas-tle house. Mrs. Grace Lemon told of seeing Miss Morrison going toward the Castle house, but saw nothing unusual about her. Mrs. Muggie Clark testified to see-

Ing Miss Morrison going toward the Castle house on the morning in ques-tion, and asked if the prisoner had anything in her hand, replied, "She had a paper in her left hand."

"What shape was the paper?" "It looked to be rolled up."

Charles B. Smith also testified to see-ing Miss Morrison going toward the Castle house on the morning of the tragedy.

At the afternoon session Mrs. Abble Castle, mother-in-law of the murdered woman, identified a small plece of black enamel found in cleaning the house af-ter the murder. It is the theory of the prosecution that this was part of a knife or razor carried by Miss Morrison. At 2 o'clock the jury was excused while the lawyers argued the point of admitting as evidence the statement of Mrs. Moherly that the first note write ten by Mrs. Castle contained these
