Irrigation and Development company with a capital of half a million to reclaim a large tract of government land in Uintah county. The tract is along the Moffat road in northeastern Utah. Two large reservoirs are to be built by the company, one north and the other a little south of the town of Moffat. Ditches will also be constructed, and the whole system will irrigate 30,000 acres. The land is now worth $1.25 per acre, but members of the company say it is similar to the land around Grand Junction, which is worth $1,000 per acre, being well adapted for fruit. Seventy-five hundred acres have already been filed upon. The water is to be taken from the Uintah river.

Lincoln, August 7, and August Bestelmeyer. Orson Pratt started ahead of the ploneer camp this morning for the purpose of taking some observations. The camp lives by drowning. Dean Hays, the 6-year-old son of H. N. Hayes and Arlie Bean, son of Bishop Virginius Bean, were playing on a sand bar while the bishop was fishing in the stream. The Hayes boy got into deep water, the Bean lad jumped in after him, and both were carried down the stream together. Roscoe Heppler, a little older than the other two, also sprang into the water, and managed to keep the boys partially above the surface until Mr. Bean could be summoned and got them out. The Hayes hoy was unconscious when taken from resumed the journey at 8 o'clock a. m. and after traveling two and a half miles, forded Black's Fork once more. A further travel of two and three-quarter miles brought them to a stream about about two rods wide and two feet deep, which they also forded, and then continued the journey until noon, when they halted on the banks of the last stream, having traveled nine miles over a pretty rough road. In the afternoon the journey was continued, and after traveling seven and a half miles, they arrived on the right bank of Black's Fork, where nine Indian lodges Black's Fork, writes Elder Pratt,

THURSDAY, JULY 8, 1847.

The morning was cold in the pioneer camp at Fort Bridger. Ice was formed during the night, which, however, was soon melted by the rising sun, the thermometer standing at 9 o'clock at 66 degrees, with a brisk wind from the southwest. Several large speckled trout were caught with the hook and line that morning. During the day the "Black's Fork," writes Elder Pratt, I line that morning. During the day the
