The eighth grade pupils of the county schools, residing in the north district, are requested to meet at the Granite state tabernacle, Friday, April 28, at 10 a. m., to practice singing in the choir, and this new party will undertake thus completing the chain for the state.

DAVIS HAS SITES TO OFFER. Davis county so far is making the most active campaign for the new farm. It has offered the Jennings farm, near Centerville, the Barzans farm, near north, and another piece of land near the Weber county line. Two of these sections are on the Bamberg road, and the third can be connected with it, it is thought. The advocates of placing the farm in this section urge that conference visitors can reach it easily over the railroad at a nominal price, and use the extensive of same in Salt Lake valley as an argument against placing the farm here.

Several sections have offered a site provided by the state, and have given up voting. A. A. Hickenlooper, secretary of the state board of horticulture, will arrive tomorrow to visit the Davis and Weber county sites, while Dr. Willard, of the Agricultural college spent yesterday and today in Utah county.

CONTEST FOR NEW EXPERIMENT FARM

Salt Lake, Davis, Weber and Utah Counties Each Planning For Station.

DAVIS OFFERS THREE SITES.

Committee of Salt Lakers Inspecting Available Location to Offer In This County.

Does Salt Lake county want a state experiment farm, and if so does she want one bad enough to offer grants to the state a site more desirable than Davis, Weber, or Utah counties can offer? This is a question a committee of her representative citizens are trying to solve, while men are today inspecting the merits of sites offered by Utah county, and tomorrow will look over three farms, a choice of which is offered by Davis county. The offering of Salt Lake county has not yet been chosen, but a committee composed of W. C. Burgen, J. P. Sorenson and L. N. Elliott from the county Horticultural society, Thomas Homer from the Real Estate association, Fisher Harris from the Commercial club, and F. Y. Taylor, was chosen last night to select a site and propose its purchase to the county commissioners. The meeting of those interested was held yesterday afternoon at the Commercial club, and the sentiment was that the Davis county site provided a site could be purchased. One location under discussion is situated near Holiday pond, east of Murray. It is doubtful if this fulfills the requirement of being near the railroad.

CREATED BY LEGISLATURE.

The new experiment farm was provided for at the last session of the Legislature, and in the bill was designated "The Central Utah Experiment Station." In the debate on the bill, several members of the Legislature advocated the site of the large orchard at Salt Lake City in April and October, could readily visit the farm and pick up valuable information. The other farms of the state are in inaccessible sections, and the results of their work can be seen only in printed bulletins, except by a limited number.

The provisions of the law creating the new farm, which was known by its passage as house bill No. 148, by the committee on agriculture and horticulture, require that the site be chosen under the supervision of the board of trustees of the Agricultural college, in some district within the section named in section 1, accessible by one or more lines of railroad. The section of country referred to includes Box Elder, Weber, Goodhue, Salt Lake, Utah and Juab counties, and the need for a special farm for these counties comes from the diversified nature of the farms in that section. The northern part of the section is best adapted to the colder and higher regions, while the southern part is better adapted to the warmer and lower regions. There is no experiment station in progress to discover the possibilities of the central Utah district, and this new farm will undertake thus completing the chain for the state.

It has offered the Jennings farm, near Centerville, the Barzans farm, near north, and another piece of land near the Weber county line.
