Yokohama, Sept. 2nd.—There were two mutinous outbreaks of discontented soldiery in Tokio, on the nights of August 23rd and 30th. A portion of the regiment of the Imperial Guards, dissatisfied with the awards of presents, decorations, etc., for services during the rebellion last year, formed a conspiracy to seize their arms and leave their barracks, probably with the purpose of demanding explanations from the leading members of the government. Their full intention, however, remains unknown. The plot was discovered beforehand, and ample precautions taken. Some 200 rioters succeeded in forcing their way out of the quarters, after murdering one colonel and two officers of the lower rank, but were speedily confronted by an overpowering force, and reduced to submission. The second rising was less serious and was partially a successful attempt to set at liberty the mutineers arrested on the first occasion. About 20 lives were lost in both disturbances. Quiet is now restored, and no further serious consequences are feared, although the ill feeling is known to still exist among the jealous agitators.
