The prisoner spent a quiet day refusing to see visitors except those with whom he has been intimate and who had taken an interest in the commutation of his sentence.

LONDON, August 2.—In the Commons, tonight Labouchere called the attention of the House to the breach of privilege of which the Times was guilty in charging the Parnellites with trying to drown the commission with a flood of blackguardism unparalleled in the history of Parliament.

Goschen concurred in the charge that a breach of privilege had been committed by the Times, but moved to proceed to business. This was agreed to.

He next moved that the chairman shall have the power at one o'clock in the morning to put the remaining clauses.

Reid appealed to the government to respect the right of the majority to obtain a full discussion of the obnoxious clauses.

Sir William Harcourt said the motion was without the slightest reason or justice. The bill was of such importance that it ought to be adequately discussed.

T. P. O'Connor said the closure of debate as proposed amounted to a decree that the most important proposals in the bill must be passed without discussion. It was an act of brute violence on the part of the government.

Timothy Healy moved to amend the motion by inserting the words, "If the chairman so think," thus leaving to the discretion of the chair the application of the closure rule. Rejected.

Justin McCarthy moved an amendment extending the inquiry to the circumstances under which the charges were originally made by the Times. Rejected.

Labouchere moved that the letters be inquired into and reported on before the other matter. He did not think any member of the government was so vile and base [laughter] as to refuse this concession. If the government did refuse it, he would recommend Parnell to wash his hands of the commission and sue the Times for libel.

Sir George Otto Trevelyan, Mr. Sexton and Mr. Vernon Harcourt favored the amendment.

Lord Hartington objected to it. Major Sanderson was called to order for declaring that Harcourt had maligned the Parnellites before the Times did. Proceeding, he said what the Parnellites feared was evidently not the inquiry into the letters.

When quiet was restored the warden read the death warrant. Morgan, who was dressed in a neat suit of black and wore a bouquet of roses in his button hole, grew restless. Several lumps rose in his throat during the reading, but he was perfectly self-possessed.

Latouchere's amendment was defeated, 281 to 203.

Healy moved to amend the proviso to the effect that the Commissioners should make a separate report in regard to the charges against each individual member where the decisions are averse.

Parnell desired to say a few words. It was vain to deny that he approached the commission with a rankling sense of injustice. He did not object to the principle of the commission in its inception and would not have complained of the extension of its scope to a political organization if a fair hearing and notice of charges against him could be secured.

Healy's amendment was defeated by 283 to 231.

BOSTON, Aug. 3.—The mock sword practice between Viennese fencers at the Bijou theatre was varied last night by a real duel. For some months past Mathilde Tagamann, a tall dark Austrian beauty has been the favorite swords-woman of Prof. Hartl, the manager, who paid her many compliments. All this time Anna Brantslo, a small blonde, has been jealous of her big rival, and tonight when the two came on the stage, blood was in the eyes of both.

After tarrying a few moments Brantslo rushed upon her opponent with great fury. They parried and fought in anger for at least fifteen minutes. The audience rose to their feet and yelled, and cheered the combatants, while several ladies fainted away. Finally Brantslo forced the tall favorite to the wings of the theatre, beat her down upon the floor of the stage and actually pulled her hair in token of victory. Prof. Hartl, who came forward to stop the fight, was assaulted by Brantslo and driven off the stage. No such sword practice was ever seen in Boston before.

and the employers and employes worked, ate and slept in the crowded rooms of the dingy tenement. About 4:15 p. m., while all the occupants of the building were busy at work in the closing hours preceding their Sabbath eve, the flames broke out on the lower floor. The fire had, when discovered, already gained such headway that it was in full possession of the stairway, and escape by it seemed impossible.

Many of the frightened inmates rushed down through the flames to the narrow courtyard with their clothes ablaze and hands and bodies burned. There were fire escapes on the front and rear of the house. There were perpendicular iron ladders running down the rear of the building, but before the inmates had tried to escape by them the flames had ascended through the house and were reaching the front window, so that descent by the fire escapes was impossible.

The enormous crowds that had gathered shook with dread and sympathy as some of the wounded shrieked and groaned with pain, and others feebly moaned out in anguish.

COMPLETE POSSESSION of the house, and nothing could be done to save it, and little to save its inmates. Charles W. Norman, property man of the People's Theatre, with several of his comrades, ran to the rear of the theatre carrying a small ladder, which they stretched over to the window of the burning building. A woman with her hair and clothing already ablaze appeared at the window and Norman called on her to cross on the ladder. She cried back she could not leave her two children, but the flames drove Norman back and he could not save her.

Afterwards, the charred body of the mother and her two children were found in the building. Three men availed themselves, however, of the ladder and escaped to the roof of the theatre.

Thirteen bodies were found in the building. The bodies of the men who leaped from the fifth story window increased the death list to fifteen, and it is feared that the list of some, if not all of those in the hospital will make the number greater. Several of the bodies were burned so badly that they fell apart when removed, and the firemen were obliged to lower them in nets.

The fire started on the first floor in the apartment of Emma Stevenson, the janitress of the building, and was caused by the explosion of kerosene oil stoves.

THE LIST OF THE KILLED, corrected up to midnight, is given herewith: Gruft Adele, aged 23, with her new born babe, burned to death. Gruft, Joseph, 7 years, burned to death. Gruft, Cella, 4 years, burned to death. Newall and Crowley it is claimed by Scott had trespassed upon his property. Scott said he would stab any one who would infringe on his rights to which Crowley said that a man who would use a knife was a cur. At this Scott drew a pocket knife and stabbed Crowley in the stomach three times. Newall picked up a club and sprang to Crowley's assistance, and received a stab in the left breast that reached the lung. Smith was also stabbed, but not seriously. Scott was arrested and taken to Gresham for safety. Newall's wounds are dangerous and Crowley lies unconscious, and his death is expected at any moment.
