reason to congratulate themselves on services held over the remains of Elder A. W. C. Lau Kielholz, it was stated "the congregation was largely of German Saints." It should be stated that they were Holland Saints, and not German Saints. Quite frequently Germans are called Dutch and Dutch are called Germans, notwithstanding they are two distinct nations having two distinct languages. A Hollander who was in attendance offers the following suggestion: "At least one-third of the congregation were unable to understand any portion of the services, which were conducted entirely in English. For the pleasure and profit of those Saints who are unable to understand English. I sould suggest that at least a portion of the services on such occasions, where a large percentage of the congregation are foreigners be conducted in their natongue so that all may be benefited by the remarks made.'
