INFANT CRUSADERS IN MEVAL TIMES.

A MARCH TO THE HOLY SEPULCHRE—one hundred thousand children attempt to reach the Holy Land.

The general story of the Crusaders is well known. History has faithfully preserved the memory of the millions who went on the previous march to Jerusalem, assisted with their lives the sinfulness of their faith. One feature, however, of that wonderful fanatical delusion the historian overlooked.

It is a simple story, into which is woven a thrilling tale of heroism. It is the legend of a mailed cavalier, and it makes little record of battles fought and victories won; but in earnest devotion, implicit faith, grand enthusiasm, generous self-sacrifice and painful martyrdom, it leaves no parallel in all history. We refer to "Our French Crusade," which comprised three armies of French and German youth, who perished in an effort to rescue the Holy Sepulchre from the hands of the Infidel.

Respectfully,

NOTICE TO THE TRADE.

THE UNDERSIGNED NOTIFIES THE TRADE THAT he has been exclusively engaged in the Hat, Cap, Boot and Shoe business for the last twenty-five years, and he wishes to call your attention to the fact, that in order to serve the trade this season, he has made very large purchases in the above lines, and will keep the stock full through the season. Any orders that the trade may favor him with will have prompt and careful attention, and at the very lowest prices. He hopes, by strict attention in above specialties, and not interfering in his neighbors' business, to merit a portion of the patronage of the trade.

Respectfully,

GEORGE DUNFORD.

FIVE CENTURIES AGO

The literature of Europe was full of accounts of this most dolorous crusade. But it gradually and unaccountably dropped out of the story of the knightly adventures who bore the cross to glory on the plains of Syria, and it was never again mentioned to rescue the story from oblivion, and through the publishing house of Hurd & Houghton his researches have been given to the world. All honor to the Rev. George Zabreki Gray, of New Jersey, for this act of tardy justice to the memory of the brave, the noble, the ideal of the world had forgotten.

In the year 1187 the celebrated Saladin, after a long and bloody war, routed the Christian forces from Palestine and recaptured Jerusalem, which had passed into the dominion of the Saracens about eight years before. Richard I of England, Frederick of Germany, and Henry VI each sent forward vast armaments to reconquer the Holy City, but their success was not great. Lodgements were made upon the sea-coast, but no assault was made upon the island. In 1198, a fifth army started for the same object, but effected nothing.

It was while the hearts of all devout believers were filled with grief and mortification over these repeated failures, that the singular and remarkable event of the "Child's Crusade" burst out and spread like an epidemic, and in the end was not less fatal. Its first manifestation was at the tomb of one of the Saints to which pious pilgrims were wont to resort for prayer.

THE YOUNG APOSTLE.

A boy named Stephen, from a squalid village near Orleans, repaired to the spot and addressed the pilgrims there assembled, asserting that he had been visited by Jesus Christ in a vision. He recited a letter to the King of France, with authority to go and recover the Holy Sepulchre. This child's appearance was peculiar, and he seemed more like a being from the other world than one belonging to this earth. His voice was almost angelic, his enthusiasm and faith unbound and touching. It was at the age of superstition, and the seals of the day went mad with the fanaticism.

The news spread with unfeigned rapidity from town to town, from city to city and from province to province, until all France was aglow with the excitement. Other lads caught the fanatical infection and called upon their playmates to join in a last effort to rescue the tomb of Christ from Turk. Young Stephen taught, and his followers or Leutesants preached the same doctrine—that God would miraculously lead them on to victory and give them an overwhelming victory without battle or bloodshed. Many parents, friends, or guardians sought to prevent their little ones under their care from yielding to the prevailing madness, their remonstrances were drowned by the acclamations of the more superstitious and effectually silenced by the family quarelling which took a terrible meaning.

"Suffer little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not."

THE GENERAL MADNESS.

It seemed as though the whole population had gone stark mad. The University of Paris took the initiative in an attempt to check the wild fanaticism but schism and treason were powers. The King was prevailed upon to issue an order forbidding the preaching of the childlike apostles, W. O. were organizing crusades; but it is evident that too, had been somewhat infected by the superstition, for he took to preaching to enforce obedience to his ministrants, which he knew was daily violated.

On June 12th, the young crusader, Stephen, called his followers together from all the provinces and districts of France, and thirty thousand marched to Vendeuvre. The enthusiasm had not been confined to the lower classes, and the sons of the nobles as well as the children of the poor joined the ranks of the cross. Girls left their homes by thousands to accompany the army, and the history also records that men and women of the worst character came united themselves to the expedition for the vilest of purposes.
