We found in the flords of Norway something we had never seen. The mountains seem to have cracked and the flords were made by the water rushing in. Here also is the land of the midnight sun. And after spending several days and nights in this land, where the sun after shining all day depresses itself al-most to the horizon and then comes up and shines again.—I thanked God that we lived in a country where the curtain of darkness is drawn at night-fall, and we are granted the blessing of night. Chinese will join Japan in adopting the civilization of the west in its entirety. Japan was also visited by Mr. and Mrs. Bryan, and an audience was given then by the emperor. In speaking of the progress made by the Japanese, Mr progress made by the Japanese, Mr. Bryan said the question in his mind was whether the Japanese would not adopt the religion of the west, which was the basis of western civilization, as she had adopted her ideas in gov-ernment. Upon this, said Mr. Bryan, depends the permanency of her civil-ization. The speaker described his vis-its to royalty. He visited the sultan of Sulu, who required more bowings and scrapings than the mightest mon-arch on earth-the king of England. He spent a half hour with the czar of Russia. "Ten years ago," said Mr. Bryan, 'I was accused of being an anarchist. I submit that if there is anyone who can spot an anarchist on TOURISTS SLIGHT PALESTINE. "I was astonished at the comparative-

Grand—The Grand was crowded last night, on the occasion of the first of the three evenings and one matinee performance of "The King of Tramps." There is but little in the plot of the play to prove very at-tractive, but the specialties are so numerous and of such a character as to provide a good entertainment. W. C. Turner is the "heavy," and, but for his decidedly poor enunciation, did acceptable work. Victor Faust as the "Tramp," was amusing, and his musical turns upon various instru-ments were clever. his musical turns upon various instru-ments were clever. The best work was that of Alfred and Loic Bridge and Leon and Gertie Alien. The singing and dancing of the first was especially good, and as "Scarecrow Jimmie" Mr. Bridge easily won the honors of the evening. The music furnished by the "King of Tramps" orchestra was catchy and well played. The same bill will be seen for the remainder of the week, to be follow-ed for the first half of next week by "My Wife's Relatives."

Orpheum-Tonight is the regular society night at the State street vaude-ville theater where the hazardous loop is the stellar feature this week.

Lyric-"Brother for Brother" will conclude its run at the Lyric tomor-row night.

The thrones of King Oscar of Sweden and the crowning of King Haakon of Norway were described. "I bowed to Haakon twice, and my wife said the king smiled; and I'll wager he'll smile if I ever bow to him again," saidMr. Bryan amid a roar of laughter. The speaker, in conclusion, paid a high tri-bute to American citizenship; to the American women, and said nowhere on the face of this eart are women so ex-alted as they are in America. Nowhere bave is cut of one of the departments in the store of D. W. Horseley, at No. 602 West North Temple St. Mr. Horsley started business in 1900 in store just 15 by 15. He now occupies his own building, 60 by 75, with three departments. A Utah boy, he has been noted as a hard worker and one of Salt Lake's most progressive merchants. Being at the terminus of the new viaduct, his store promises this year to fairly double last year's business.

Mr. Horsley states that much of his success is due to the National Cash Register, which introduced a perfect system in his store. He now uses the wonderful ELECTRIC NO. 106 NATIONAL CASH REGISTER. This is the first grocery and meat market in Utah or Idaho to use the electrical register. This register system makes better clerks, increases sales, increases profit, makes each clerk reponible for his own mistakes, shows the proprietor the exact condition of business at any time, and also prevents the failure to charge goods sold on credit. By adopting the 100 principle National Cash Register system, Mr. Horsley has shown himself to to be thoroughly up to date.

Further information regarding this wonderful cash register system can be obtained by addressing
