For occasional measurements the earthen channel of a ditch or canal answers all purposes, but when more ac-curate and continuous measurements are desired rating flumes are usually constructed. These consist of wooden flumes as wide as the water channel and from eight to 24 feet in length, placed to conform with the grade of the canal. The velocity of the water is found by a current meter, within 2 per cent of accuracy when all the requiste conditions are fulfilled. Weir boxes as compared with miners' that the water as it issues from the notch requires a drop of at least dou-
