Danger in Berries From Arsenical Spraying Mixtures.

FEARFUL RESULT OF EXPLOSION.

Former Salt Laker Dies in Arizona—Cut His Throat With a Buckeaw—A Schoolboy's Love.

Glenwood Springs, Colo., Avalanche: Two Elders from Utah were here on May 15, and spoke in the evening at Odd Fellows' hall.

Russell C. Woodruff, cashier of the Prescott National bank, died at Prescott, Arizona, on Tuesday, after an illness of about a month. Mr. Woodruff was a native of Detroit, where his family is prominent. He lived several years in Salt Lake City, where he is well known.

An unknown man about 75 years of age was found dead this morning in a dying condition six miles of the electric road just below the San Lorenzo bridge at Haywards, Cal. He expired shortly after. An autopsy showed that he had two ribs broken and a bad bruise on the side. It is thought he was struck by an electric car.

A Colorado law provides that any wife shall sell, give or furnish any tobacco, or articles made in whole or in part of tobacco, to any child under 16 years of age, without the written order of the father or guardian of such child, shall be fined in a sum not less than $5 nor more than $100, or be imprisoned in the county jail not more than three months. The state school officers are active in seeing that the law is enforced.

Tuesday afternoon J. C. Donigan, a tramp undergoing a short sentence in the county jail at Santa Rosa, Cal., attempted to take his life. He took a large buckaw used by the prisoners for cutting wood, retired to a dark cell and deliberately commenced sawing his throat. He inflicted several horrible wounds, but County Physician Shearer silenced them up, after which Donigan was removed to the county hospital. He is believed to be insane.

The remains of a man were found near Sandy Run, Cal., Sunday, and the coroner from Auburn held an inquest Tuesday, but could not learn the man's identity. A revolver was found near the remains, with two chambers loaded. There was a bullet wound in the forehead. The man was apparently about 30 years old and well dressed. There were no papers on the body. In the cuffs were gold sleeve buttons marked "E. P." Two half dollars were found in the pockets. The body was half a mile from the railroad.

Health Officer Dunn, of Oakland, Cal., has had his attention drawn to the widespread sickness caused by the consumption of straw berries raised by Portuguese gardeners at Oakland who have been in the habit of applying arsenic to their plants. Some days ago the sickness was prevalent, but seemed to decrease, now only to assert itself again and in much worse form. The health officer warns all the gardeners to stop using any solution containing a trace of poison for the purpose of killing bugs. Several people who ate berries secured from the markets have been violently ill.

A man named Santino Navoni at the Gold Bank mine in Forbestown, Cal., was seriously, if not fatally, wounded by the explosion of a blast on Tuesday. He and another miner had placed four blasts in a row and touched the fuse of the first one. This "fizz ed," as the miners express it, or the fuse burned out without exploding the powder. Navoni then put another piece of fuse in the powder while it was yet heated from the burning end of the first fuse. An explosion followed and Navoni was struck by the flying rocks and badly cut on the right temple, the skull being laid bare, both eyeballs were blown out on his cheeks and a serious gash was cut by the rocks in the shoulder.

Little Flossie Brush has been hovering between life and death for a week at San Francisco, from the effects of a blow struck by a schoolmate, Ross Harvill, on Thursday, the 20th inst. The boy and girl were seated near each other in school. As the circumstances are related by other children who were in the schoolroom at the time, Harvill was teasing the little girl, stepping on her toes and otherwise annoying her, and finally took away her pencil. She tried to get her pencil back and finally grabbed it, whereupon he struck her with his fist in the side just below the lower ribs and over the liver. At the same time he kicked her on the shins. Whether he struck her more than one blow or not is not known. She began to cry at once and complained of severe pains. Later peritonitis developed, and the girl is in a critical condition.

Roy Hamilton, only 12 years old, is the hero of Bellwood, Oregon. Last Saturday Charles Hays, a lad of 15, while paddling in a lagoon formed by the high water of the Willamette on a raft, fell overboard, and as he could not swim he at once sank. Standing on the bank of the slough were half a dozen boys, watching Hays' movements. Among them was little Hamilton. Realizing as Hays went down that the boy could not swim, Hamilton, throwing off his jacket only, plunged into the water and swam to the raft. The little fellow is an adept swimmer. When he reached the raft Hays was going down for the second time. Hamilton began wrenching the boards forming the deck and throwing the pieces to Hays. The latter, however, was too far gone from fright and the water he had taken to pay any attention to the life-saving supports thrown within his grasp. Seeing the drowning boy sinking for the third time, Hamilton dived for him and managed to clutch his arm, and Hays had become unconscious, and the heavy weight of the boy was more than the young hero could sustain. He was obliged to release his hold of the body and come to the surface for breath. Hamilton struck out for shore and reached the bank. He ran in his dripping clothes to give the alarm at the Bellwood Lumber company's mill. In half an hour the millmen recovered the body.

Police Officer J. B. Boyce of Oakland, Cal., was stopped Tuesday night by highwaymen and compelled, at the point of two pistols, to give up his revolver, the only article of value which he happened to have upon his person. Boyce was mounted at the time and was just going on duty. He had left the city hall and was galloping out Broadway, when at the corner of Twelfth street he was astonished to see two men spring into the street from a deep shadow and run toward him. The idea of robbery never entered his head at all. At first he supposed that the parties either knew him or desired some service. As the men reached him they each produced a revolver, which they thrust into his face and commanded him in positive terms to throw his hands high above his head. Boyce did so, he was told. He was without money, but had a good revolver, which they took. They told him they would spare him the humiliation of taking his star from him. The police are keenly alive to the presumption of the highwaymen, who seem now to be holding sway carnival about the city. Boyce says that his first impulse was to show fight, but he was convinced that this would mean instant death and so suffered himself to be robbed. He did not care to turn back at once to the station at the city hall, for the robbers watched him until he was out of sight. The highwaymen were not masked.

Fir places of Snow.

At the first glance, snow does not look like a very promising material for a fireplace, and yet I think I am not mistaken in saying that every winter there are hundreds of fires built in fireplaces made of this substance. This is less surprising when we stop to think that in the part of America where this is done the temperature out doors during the winter months seldom rises as high as zero, and frequently falls as low as forty or fifty degrees below.

About the end of January, or when the sun again appears above the horizon, many families at the two Eskimo villages near Point Barrow, in Alaska, leave their winter houses and travel inland seventy-five or one hundred miles to hunt reindeer along the upper waters of the large rivers that flow into the Arctic Ocean east of the point. Here they encamp in large, comfortable snow houses, usually dug out in solid snowdrift. Like the Eskimo winter houses, these are entered by passing a long, low tunnel, and opening out of one side of this tunnel there is a fireplace built in the Cape Smyth village, near our station.

A young man and his wife moved down from Point Barrow after winter had set in, and, as there was no accommodation for them in any of the permanent wooden houses, they built themselves a small hut from blocks of snow and roofed it over with sailcloth. I made them a visit one afternoon, and found the house pretty cold and uncomfortable in spite of the large stone lamp that was burning all the time. The entrance tunnel was about ten feet long; at the left hand as you entered, and close to the door was the fireplace. This was about two and a half feet square, and neatly built of slabs of snow, with a smoke-hole at the top and a stick stuck across at the proper height to hang a pot on. When the first fire is built in such a fireplace, there is considerable melting of the surface of the snow, but as soon the fire is allowed to go out this dries to a hard glaze of ice, which afterward melts only a very little. These fire places are used only for cooking, as the Eskimos rely wholly on the oil lamps for warming the dwelling.—John Murdoch, in Juse Lippincott's.
