B 88.

I don't want to trouble you with too many details. It is enough to say that every time I took out B 88 as a part of my train, and every time the middle compartment was unoccupied, so sure was I to see the ghost of Mr. Muxloe. You see it was a thing I dared not talk about, for fear the Company should say that a man who was in the habit of seeing ghosts was not fit to be guard of a train, and should send me about my business in consequence. I did, however, talk about the ghost once or twice to my wife, and got called a fool for my pains. But what else could a married man expect? Wives, as a rule, don't like other people to call their husbands fools, but they don't object to make use of that objectionable little word themselves.

Well, Sir, time went on, and my life almost became a burden to me. I was a haunted man, and I had no means of getting rid of my tormentor. I went off my feed. I no longer enjoyed my dinners as I had been used to do. My evening pipe no longer soothed me. I began to go more into company, and to frequent the bar parlor of an evening oftener than was good for me. You see, I could not bear the company of my own thoughts. I never liked to sit by myself after dark. Even my sleep was broken, and disturbed with dreams of that terrible ghost.

It was soon after Mr. Muxloe first began to trouble me in this way that I made up my mind to ascertain whether he could be seen by any one besides myself. One day, when he had traveled with me all the way from Park End to the end of my journey, and we had drawn up for the collection of tickets, says I to one of the collectors, who had passed his compartment as though it were empty, and having my eye on the ghost all the time—says I, "Bill, you have forgotten to collect that old gent's ticket in the middle compartment of B 88."

"Have I?" says Bill, and with that he goes back and opens the door of B 88. "Why, you duffer, the compartment's empty," says he the next moment, giving the door an extra bang.

"Empty, is it?" says I, innocent like. "Ah! now I recollect, the old gent got out at the last station." But the dread that was upon me deepened when I found that the apparition could be seen by no one but myself.

Four, or it may be five, months had gone by from the date of Mr. Muxloe's death, when my health broke down—so much so, that I was ordered away for a month to my native air. Change of air and rest, the doctor said, would probably make a man of me again. I had not given him the least hint as to the real cause of my illness; I was afraid I should only be laughed at for my pains.

Well, I went away down north, and there I picked up appetite and strength wonderfully. Mr. M. never troubled me once; indeed, I had not expected that he would do so, B88 being far away from me. So it fell out that by the end of my holiday I had grown so strong and hearty as almost to be able to laugh at myself as a whimsical fool who had allowed himself to be frightened by a shadow. I fully made up my mind that rather than let myself get into such a low nervous way again, I would give up my situation as guard, and set up in some other line of life. So the end of my holiday came, and I started back home one cold frosty afternoon in early spring-time, looking forward with pleasure to seeing my old woman and the two lads again, and wondering how my mates at the station had been getting on while I had been away.

It was eight o'clock, and had long been dark, when I reached Carnhope Junction—that is, the junction with our own line, a place eight miles from Park End. The guard who had charge of the train from Carnhope was an old mate of mine. Fo the first twenty miles I traveled with him in his brake, and we had a quiet smoke and a chat together. Then, feeling inclined for a snooze, I left him and got into an empty second-class compartment. Here I wrapped myself well up, and was asleep in three minutes. I must have slept for about an hour, when I awoke with a star, and could not make out for a minute or two where I was. I was still rubbing my eyes, and looking round with a gape, when I saw something that brought me to my senses with a shock, as if I had been suddenly thrust overhead in ice-cold water—inside the door of the carriage in which I was sitting was marked up the fatal number B 88!

All the feelings and fears which I had flattered myself had vanished forever came back in a rush as I read over the number to myself in a frightened whisper. The thought that B 88 would form part of the train in which I should travel back home after my holidays had never entered into my calculations. I had never thought to look at the carriages before getting into the train at Carnhope Junction, and, in consequence of this neglect, a strange fate had led me into the very place of all others where I would least have wished to be. B 88 was a composite carriage—that is to say, the middle compartment was a first-class one, while the two end compartments were second-class. It was in one of these latter compartments that I was now sitting. The middle first-class compartment was the one haunted by the ghost of Mr. Muxloe.

CAUTION!

ALL PERSONS USING THE GREAT UNKNOWN HAIR RESTORER, are respectfully cautioned against using in connection therewith any other preparation, such as Hair Dyes, or Restorers, which claim to color the Hair, but which cause deleterious effects to the scalp.

The Great Unknown Hair Restorer is not a Hair Dye.

It will not color the skin, nor injure the health.

Baldness is not always caused by the absence or destruction of the hair-bulb, but generally through a lack of vitality in the scalp, brought on by many causes, the bulb becomes feeble; in time the hair falls off leaving the bulb in the scalp and the head bald.

This Preparation immediately penetrates to the bulbs, imparting to them new strength and causing them to again shoot forth with youthful vigor.

It prevents the hair fallins off in a few applications, and gives entire satisfaction to all who are using it.

Many Ladies and Gentlemen in this city are now enjoying the beneficial effects of a few weeks' use of the Great Unknown Hair Restorer.

Beware of Counterfeits.
