JOHN B. ROGERS' DEATH.

Story is Told in a Letter from Major Scoffeld, U. S. A.

Alexander Rogers has received the following letter from Major W. B. Scofield, United States paymaster at Manilla, containing the announcement of the death of his son, John B. Rogers, which appeared in last evening's 'News." Deceased was a popular young man, being warm in his feelings or others and always ready to help ayone who was in need of assistance. The letter is as follows:

"Tongku, China, Oct. 6, 1900. "Dear Sir-It is my painful duty to nform you of the death of your son. John B. Rogers, on the night of Sept. 28, 1900, at the United States general hospital at Tien Tsin, China, of acute

We left Manila on August 31, under orders to pay the troops in General. Chaffee's army, and arrived in China Sept. 7. When we left Manila John was in perfect health and good spirits at being one of those chosen for this detail, and all went well until a day or two before our arrival, when he complained of a slight feeling of discom-fort in the region of the rectum. He attached little importance to it, and, in-deed, seemed to have entirely recovered before we reached Tien Tsin. While there it returned so bad that I was obliged to go to Pekin without him, aving him in the hospital at Tien sin. The surgeon there pronounced it ysentery, but said it was apparently a ery slight case and a rest of a week or ten days would probably bring him around all right. About a week later I was advised of his death. His remains are buried in the British ceme-tery at Tien Tsin with all the usual arngements for identification, etc.

"I have in my possession his watch, volver and a few trinkets he was carrying with him in the expectation of go-ing from here to the United States. In one of my boxes in Manila are his discharge papers from the Utah artil-lery, and I believe some other papers, all of which I will forward to you at the first opportunity. He had in his pocket a small sum of money, barely sufficient to pay his expenses. His His clothing was of no value, as, in the ex-pectation of a speedy return to the United States, he had, like myself, allowed his wardrobe to run down to the lowest possible point.

Freight Train Dashes Into Another While Standing at the Water Tank This Morning,

The blinding snowstorm which raged last night and early this morning was responsible for a wreck on the Oregon Short Line near Farmington at 1 a. m., in which H. A. Schack was scalded and killed and W. L. Cattmire severely bruised.

An extra southbound freight train was taking water at the Farmington tank, when, without a moment's notice, the second extra, which was supposed to be running an hour later, dashed in-to the caboose of the stationary train with the result that the moving engine (No. 303) was detailed and ten cars of coal piled up in a heap beside the track. Engineer Benson saved himself by umping, while Fireman Schack was binned to his post and killed; W. L. 'attmire, a brakeman, sustained some bad bruises. The entire crew was more less shaken up. The deceased fireman is a single man, and boards at 525 west, North Temple street. He came here some time ago from Missouri. His father, Frederick Schack, is said to live at West Jordan, while his mother resides in Missouri. Every effort on the part of the Short Line officials has been made today in order to locate the father of the deceased fireman, but as yet without

The wrecking outfit, with Superintendent Young on board, went out to the scene of the accident as soon after the news of the collision was received in this city as it was possible to get the wrecking crew together. So well did they accomplish their work that by 7:20 this morning the line was once more thrown open to general traffic. The wreck is a costly one, as it will take over $1,000 to put engine No. 303 in repair, while in the majority of cases the cars are total wrecks, so much so that the advisability of burning the major portion of the debris is being seriously considered. Just who is to blame in the accident will be brought out in the inquiry, which will be held this afternoon by the railroad officials. Those in charge of the two trains were respectively Conductor Hawley and Engineer Chaffee on the first extra, and Conductor McCoy and Engineer Benson on the
