During the time Clark has been in the county jail he has been a troublesome prisoner. He was one of the

DIARYING IN JAPAN.

There is no question of the alertness of the better class of Japanese and their intention to learn all that the west has to teach them. Japanese students are found in all kinds of colleges in all parts of all countries, and they are there for business. They are acquiring in one generation all the best fruits of western research and experiment through the ages. Sen Utsunomiya, a graduate of the college of agriculture of the University of Wisconsin, has recently returned to America from Sapporo, Japan, where he owns a dairy farm.

Though it will cost him $135 for every cow which he expects to his native land, he was willing to come across the ocean for a carload of pure-bred dairy cattle, as it is impossible to buy pure stock in Japan. In an article for the Student Farmer, he tells of his efforts in establishing dairy herds on the island of Hokkaido. In the extreme northern part of the Japanese empire. After graduating from the Wisconsin agricultural college, he went back to his native land, peninsula. He hired a single cow and an acre of land, and paid for them out of the first year's products.

From that one cow was developed his herd of 40 milk cows and 20 young stock, which yielded him last year 10,000 pounds of butter. As butter sells at 40 cents a pound all the year in Japan, and beef is 12 or 15 cents dressed weight in winter, he has been able to buy himself a fine 50-acre farm a half mile from the city of Sapporo, where a population of 50,000 insures him a ready market for all his dairy products.

The Japanese government has recently laid a heavy import tax on all dairy products, amounting to $13.50 per 100 pounds for butter and $7 or $8 for 100 pounds of cheese. This high duty has given great stimulus to the native production, as the importation has been much lessened and a demand for the same product increased. Mr. Utsunomiya has made a pioneer movement toward the introduction of alfalfa into the Japanese islands as fodder by sowing a field last year in which he secured a good stand. In concluding his article he writes that, in his opinion, American dairymen should more than the staples, more care regarding cleanliness in milking, more attention to stamping out tuberculosis, and a larger number of pure-bred stock in the herds.—San Francisco Chronicle.
