

HOLIDAY FOR STOCK BROKERS.

Exchanges Will be Closed on Washington's Birthday.

THE OLD BOARD MAY MOVE.

Resolution Affecting Mining Companies' Business Good in the Pits This Morning.

Tomorrow, Washington's Birthday, the stock exchanges will close their doors and the market will change its location to the 3d floor of that great and roomy The Father of His Country's in consequence, stocks generally will be given the "go-by" and not traded overday morning, will see quotations established. Of course, there will be some little carbuncles, but, trading through a legitimate medium, will be suspended the day after the holiday.

ON THE EXCHANGE.

With Stripping Banks Still in Good Volume of Business.

A good volume of business was transacted on the exchanges yesterday, the sales being reaching 1,000 shares, for which buyers paid the sum of $29,000. The day was generally quiet, with a few short, sharp movements, but, as usual, buying and selling were well balanced, our record of 1,000 shares being made.

The long-pending resolution to the effect that mining companies could not be affected by the stock exchanges, was voted down at the last meeting of the board, and now it is to be voted again at the "New" or second meeting.

The stock market has been quiet, and, while the market is still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves

known, and, while the market is

still in the hands of the "old-timers,"

the new members, who have been

admitted, are making themselves