THE ADVICE WAS GOOD.

A morning contemporary, which is over on the alert to impugn another's motives and, when it sees a chance without otherwise hurting itself, mount a high moral platform and wax oratorily. Indeed, only certain advice given by the speaker in the Tabernacle yesterday immoral and fraught with "vileness." It assumes that the counsel to give the wife and mother legal title to the home of herself and children is but another way of commanding a man to do all he can to beat his creditors.

The inclination is as base as it is unwarmed and false. The reader may know exactly what was said on this subject, and see for himself how far-fetched the interpretation of it by the paper in question is, we give "variations" from the telegraphic notes that part of the discussion. If there is anything immoral and vicious in warning men during an existing or threatened crisis for speculation to reserve at least a shelter for their loved ones before risking all upon a "dead" investment, morality and some have been fearfully misinterpreted. If there is anything inopportune in such warning, when the papers are full of notices of foreclosures of mortgage, and many a hapless family has nothing in prospect but expulsion from the roof over the wife may have helped to earn, then sentiment is surely sleeping and wisdom has gone to the winds. We repeat the warning and wish we had ten thousand voices to give it home and emphasis. Impell not the shelter of yourself, your wife and your children by mortgaging the home for money to speculate or go into business with and let the temptation at times might be too great, and since you cannot use for borrowed money security which is not your own, better far be on the safe side, too, of honor, love and duty—by giving to your wife for her own the home which you and she have made together. If this is immorality or vicefulness, make the most of it!

THE RETURN OF THE VICTORS.
The return of the Tabernacle Choir will take place sometime tomorrow, and the unexpected should happen, an event will occur in Weber County which is expected to diffuse the ready glow of a coming golden dawn upon that part of the Territory, perhaps upon all of it. We have heard and read dazzling amounts of the dexterity and wasting of gold miners a few miles north of Beaver City, a creation of hills where trees are washed by a beautiful stream known as Indian Creek; many who, however, have been claimed and annihilated at various times that the people of Utah have become greatly well rid of them and thus the Indian creek finds its "nest" at the head of the Blue River, they were received with no allowances and promised with immediacy. Notting short of actual demonstration no secure general recognition now and then are promised, but for the date named an amnesty thereafter with increased volume.

A stamp still and lately have been in operation about a week on one of the mine's payroll of ore, and after a twenty days' run a "stamp" will be made; that is, the amalgam formed by the particles of gold setting in quicksilver will be segregated through evaporation—and will drive the latter metal away in vapor and leave the silver behind. The company will then know not only what they have got, but what they may reasonably expect hereafter. If the cheering is sufficiently strong it is proposed to have a sort of coronation at Beaver, and in truth we believe such an event will be no sign of general rejoicing because of the peculiarity with it comes down to a sort of our Territory which has been most unusually regarded and, along with Brigham and other good preachers, among whom our serpent of the path, as main, is regarded of whom enterprises eliminated by prospectors were not sustained by later proved against others upon the scene.

Only a few days ago, immediately following the terrible tragedy on the Long Island railroad, a New York Sun reporter gave the following frank and singularly verified the above assertion of Mr. Hinckley: "Those who are disposed to believe we were, although many engineers and others of certain breeds of cerebral material are prone to do so, it is a well-known fact that certain railroads when going at high speed neglect the time for their comfort or safety. The reason is that the drivers and the locomotive drivers shun all forms of personal safety."

In the September number of Mr. Gurn's Magazine, Mr. Archibald Hinckley, one of the most prominent engineers of America, writes: "It is a well-known fact that certain railroads when going at high speed neglect the time for their comfort or safety. The reason is that the drivers and the locomotive drivers shun all forms of personal safety."

Only a few days ago, immediately following the terrible tragedy on the Long Island railroad, a New York Sun reporter gave the following frank and singularly verified the above assertion of Mr. Hinckley: "Those who are disposed to believe we were, only at the same time fearing over the increasing loss. The broken or the iron dislodged the wheels and held them up, while the wheels and over the iron, the iron held them when broken. The reversed driving wheel of the locomotive would stand, but they did not stick. With this in mind, I think that forward like a shot, a train would stop to the engineer and driver, and as the one or two passengers in the locomotive would be dead, it seemed that rather than diminishing the speed increased, but almost before there was time to think the train stopped.

People who ride much on the cars without necessarily knowing a great deal about the operation of a locomotive, are accustomed to hearing that the engine "reverses" his engine. In a moment of pert, that the reversing will come to them as a sort of astounding. It occurs up quite a field for thought and inquiry, and it would be interesting to know if the experience in the words should be, as well as the claim of pert, of which the effect would be, as given in the first quotation, as verified in the experience of other engineers. If reversing never has the immediate effect of increasing instead of reducing the speed of the train rushing to destruction, the practice has been probably abandoned and the engineers will at once want a new term to describe the engineer's attempt to avert the catastrophe. What shall this term be? And since the writer is always of interest, will not some of our Utah engineers, of whom both in active service and on the retired list we have seen, of the best in the land, tell the News reader what they would do if from their cab window they saw that a collision was inevitable?

SAXES IN THE ICE.

The London Press yesterday published a letter from Dr. Nansen, the Norwegian explorer, it is dated aboard the ship Fram at Charalopolis, Yugo-Slavia, August 2, and it is thought to be the last letter written by him before he is encircled by the ice in the Arctic regions. He does not express the hope that the ice will carry him across the north pole.

Nansen's vessel, the Fram, is a curiosity in itself. It is built of Italian oak, American pine, Norwegian pine and German oak, and the protecting armor, the so-called "ice-suit," is of great blocks of oak. Her length is 112 feet 2 inches, her beam 20 feet 1 inch and her displacement 300 tons. The daring explorer has constructed a theory of his own, when he is about to put to a practical test. It will be remembered that the American Jeannette was caught in the ice north of the Bering Sea in September 1879 and drifted to the north of the New Siberian Islands, the ice carrying it at a rate of about eight miles daily. Nansen thinks that the pole-star originally here, as fragments of the Jeannette were ultimately found on the northwest coast of Greenland, having probably passed the pole in the voyage. He says the only safest way is to drift with three currents instead of navigating against them. and he is prepared to devote five years to this hazardous experiment.

The explorer lives a few miles from Christiansen, who leaves a young wife and an infant child to wait for his return. He is still a young man determined to contribute his share towards the solution of some problems in physical geography, meteorology and other branches of science. For any mercantile purpose his voyage must be considered without value.

A GROWING DISTRICT.

Toward the end of this month, unless the unexpected should happen, an event will occur in Weber County which is expected to diffuse the ready glow of a coming golden dawn upon that part of the Territory, perhaps upon all of it. We have heard and read dazzling amounts of the dexterity and wasting of gold miners a few miles north of Beaver City, a creation of hills where trees are washed by a beautiful stream known as Indian Creek;

With profit to the West by the most existing political parties of the day.

An engineer of a long and manufacturing experience in our political administration, yesterday, told me that Judge Powers yesterday, told me that the results of the General Assembly's recent session upon his intellect. He appeared as in interview, presented at noon as to the time the Judge spent upon it with running cause at the head of Cuttwood, but without the inspiration of half a day or the rest of many hours over the midnight oil, the mind seems clear to common knowledge the Tucumcari mine should beneath be permitted to speak, not with, a interview. He was over, mightier with the jaw than with the gun-pull.

IN CAREER about an explanation of the usual swindling in their subscription lists, certain Utah papers are concluding that the present train service is not suited to their convenience. Since the transcontinental railroad was built solely for their accommodation, and is after all insufficient, there is but one other thing in the injured newspapers will have to build a few transcontinental and trans-territorial roads of their own, and run them as they please.

THE CHIEFNESS coming from New York to dispense with the free lunch counter we omitted in saloons, deserves encouragement and applause, not for the reason that there is no available flowing water with which to fill them. But in many cases there could be established systems of drivewells, or artesian wells on a small scale, by means of which all the water that is needed could be obtained. It is well worth a trial anyway, especially by those who are in mechanical circumstances and would not altogether break up if success did not attend their labors for a while. Those who produce something out of nothing are surely benefactors to this extent even if they never do anything more; and those who add to the agricultural area of the land they inhabit are more nearly statesmen in the true meaning of the term than are many of those whose chief aim is that (definition is graciously in the score or less quamquam school of politics).

We cannot have too much grain, nor, after that, any too much gold. Also we must move to say, judging by the show of apparently imminent attack, we cannot have too much silver. However that may be, with poetry to eat, we will manage to get along very well.

THE HOTEL TEMPLETON.
THE NEW HAWAIIAN MINISTER.
On Saturday last President Cleveland appointed A. B. Willis of Honolulu minister to Hawaii, Vice J. H. Blount who "safely" returned from the Islands. The new appointment is to indicate that there will be no antagonism, at least for the present, as an agent of the annexation party is now in Washington and a treaty that could have been as well arranged with him as by any other man if such a thing had been contemplated.

The new minister is not fifty years old, but, as far as we know, he is a man of solid worth, born in 1832, in Kentucky, married in 1851. His special talents among the young are physical and mental, and because he is educated by graduation from the University law school in that, he has had various public positions, was executive terms in the lower house of Congress, beginning with the 43rd being a part of his record. We may look forward to his passing through shortly on the way to his new field of labor.

THE STORY OF THE CROSS.
This is the title of a new little pamphlet issued by W. H. Beatty, Detroit, Michigan. It is an account of the passion, resurrection and ascension of our Lord, taken verbatim from the revised version of the four Gospels, but so arranged as to present these events in chronological order and omit repetitions. The pages are illustrated with beautiful portraits of Our Redeemer, mostly as they appear in the ecclesiastic passion plays. There is also a photographic view of the crucifix and crosses made by the inmates of the Blue River penitentiary.
