

GOLDEN LOSES FIGHTING HEART

It Takes Utah Players Just Five Minutes to Win Decisive Game.

OUTLOOK IS VERY BRIGHT.

Maddock's Men Now Decidedly in the Running for Intermountain Championship This Season.

No football game ever won on Cummings field has left so good a taste in the palates of the visitors as that of Saturday in which Utah won her way towards the intermountain championship through decisively whipping the Colorado school of mines.

The men who played under Coach Nashcock and the masses of students who cheered for them on the bleachers unite in feeling good today over the fact that Golden came down from the mountains to the flat land to crush a two-headed foe. It wasn't a question of winning with Golden there was no possibility of doubt about that. It was a question of whipping Utah absolutely off the football map, and Golden came down to take this honor home to Colorado.

And there was a reason for it. Some one or other of Colorado's sporting writers could possibly remember the Utah games of the past three years, in which Colorado teams were sent one by one to their holes with an opportunity to pull the holes in after them. In spite of the fact that Utah defeated Boulder last year, Utah was not given the honor of a Colorado mention at a western team. Golden shares this honor with Boulder and what interest either had in Utah was the sneaking interest of a team which wishes to find out how to crush before it is forced to recognize a superior.

CAME TO WHIP CRIPPLE.

When Maddock's word went to Gold, that the team was crippled and he didn't care to risk this strong team so early in the season, a regular avalanche of abuse was poured on the Utah team from Colorado newspapers—especially the Denver News and Times. It was the first time they had discovered that a Utah team was actually in existence.

At the capacity of Golden in forcing the game through hurling "coffee" epithets at Utah, suggested the keenness of Coach Ellsworth's desire to come and crush—return and enjoy the great reputation that would follow Utah's name.

WHIPPED EARLY.

For a time the scoring started golden to a hard kick, but it ended in a hopeless try for field goal in the realization that advancing the ball was impossible. Finally after much passing of the ball from one side to the other, the Miners tried a successful field goal, giving them four points. Near the end of the half Utah ran the score to 10 points by another forced down the field, which Golden was powerless to resist.

The next kickoff gave Golden a touch-down from the center of the field. Convill received the kick-off, Anderson failed to gain, and Convill punted, the ball being fumbled on a forward pass by Golden. It shot out from the mass of players, Douglas recovered it, and with a yard or two from a try for goal from the field, it held one more successful try out of seven that were made.

Luck gave Golden 10 points. Hard playing gave Utah 15. Had the score been all that it might have been—had those cases in which a team almost scores been successfully taken advantage of, Utah's score would be about 46. Golden's would not be large; it is this for the reason that the team could not advance the ball by straight football.

SOME NEW STARS.

The game developed one new man at least of whom Utah may place great reliance. Like Richardson, the half-back, whose spurs were won in the Denver game, comes from the Salt Lake High School squad and brings something to the school in the way of training in football fundamentals. Morris is the youngster's name. He substituted Peterson at center, and despite his light weight played a fierce game that had much to do with Utah's invincible defense. Another man who won his right to wear a color was Snow, at right end. Snow is a modest little boy, who has pointed his way up the line and no squad to find recognition, spending the time in practice that others have spent in whimpering that they were not given recognition enough the day they first came out.

One quality handicapped Snow from making a brilliant showing. That was his lack of speed, for he is a slow man. His pie face, but the way he broke through Golden's interference to stop their play was a thing to compel admiration Saturday, and his defensive playing was a bulwark of Utah strength. Seely, at guard, played in the same class, and with Palm and Morris, kept Golden helpless in their efforts to form plays.

THE OFFENSE.

When it came to Utah's offense, Dick Bryant proved himself as plucky a man as had headed a line of Utah interference. Captain Russell, the heavy and speedy halfback, was often behind him with plunges that netted winning yards. A Utah line was in front of them that refused to break for the Golden onslaught, and so it was that superior work both on the offense and defense made the Colorado pride die with the sunset, and turned a defeated team backward and towards Denver.

THE PLAN.

gals. He went two around right. The critical five minutes in which the Golden team was crowded into the fighting heart began with a half-kick from Knowles to Russell, who returned the ball 20 yards. Then began an offensive series with Richardson proving on the first down that he could gain. He went two around right end, Anderson circled the other end for three more, and Convill sent the oval spinning down the field in a long run-up to the best standard of Fred Benson in his palmy days.

GOLDEN HELPLESS.

Now came Golden's chance to prove what they could do. The opportunity resulted in a fumble, and Utah was at the Golden line again, for four yards, with an assault from Convill on the left. Another long punt resulted in a return from a fair catch, and gave Utah the ball 20 yards. Then began an offensive series with Richardson proving on the first down that he could gain. He went two around right end, Anderson circled the other end for three more, and Convill sent the oval spinning down the field in a long run-up to the best standard of Fred Benson in his palmy days.

PROBLEMS COMING.

Another shipment of bounds for the court was expected to arrive from the Waterloo cup will take place at 8 o'clock this evening. The drawings were set for last evening but it was decided to have a new drawing because of difficulty in the first game was a feature.
