CONTEMPT OF COURT—A RELIC OF BARBARISM.

There seems to be a widespread and growing sentiment in opposition to the arbitrary and almost unlimited power of the judiciary to punish for contempt, particularly constructive contempt.

Mr. Kimber, an eminent English solicitor and for some years past secretary of the English Criminal Law Amendment Association, recently wrote to Mr. Board, M. P. for Greenwich, as follows:

"The judges have most undoubtedly presumed upon their power. The power to commit for contempt is too absolute for the administrator of it. It blinds his eyes, and prevents reason from setting upon his conscience. It is a relic of barbarism that ought to be abolished. There are many courts in this country without the power of contempt, and which, if given to him, would pander to his pride and self importance."

The Washington Capital of June 13 says—

"In the United States court at Galveston a Judge Morrill has refused to sell two colored women seats. The Galveston News commented on this action editorially, and in a moderate tone, whereupon the judge summoned the proprietors of the paper to answer for contempt. This power of courts to punish for contempt is generally regarded as an exceptional relic of barbarism which the careful nursing of judges and the carelessness of lawyers and legislators have preserved. We hope to live to see the end of so unreplicable a power, which is dangerous when lodged in any hands."

The Missouri Globe-Democrat comments upon the same case in this wise—

"The recent issue in Galveston, between the judiciary and the journalists, does not seem to have developed a new power, or a new dignity or sagacity. Indeed, the gentleman who represented the judiciary in that contest exhibited an ability to back down, and a capacity for any other act, which were more remarkable than admirable. The Galveston News published an editorial article concerning a civil rights case on trial before Judge Morrill of the United States Court, speaking quite severely and sarcastically of the judge, and representing the court as a phenomenal tribunal, wrapped in the awful sanctity of judicial ignorance." There was not much meaning in the expression, but it must have sounded very badly to the judge as he forthwith caused a process to be served on the proprietors of the News, citing them to show cause why they should not be considered in contempt of court. Thus much of the proceeding was telegraphed to the press generally, provoking considerable comment.

But it was only a tempest in a tea-cup, it soon subsided. The News proprietors appeared, as they were cited to do, and answered that the article in question was not a contempt of court or violation of the laws of the United States. Whereupon Judge Morrill poured upon the troubled waters the oil of his judicial indignation, in which he surprised the public by the 'phenomenal' character of his backing down. He directed that should any effort be made to obstruct the administration of justice; that it actually had the effect of causing such obstruction, and he explained their intentions in court. Yet he went on to say that the summons issued, requiring the journalists to show cause why they should not be considered in contempt of court, was not a command or a requirement, but simply a 'polite request' that they should appear and explain their intentions in publishing the article. He further remarked that the proprietors of the News had disclaimed any intent on their part to obstruct the administration of justice, and that his personal knowledge of those men was such that he could not help believing that they were sincere.

He then stated that the publication in the News was merely a Pickwickian production, that the proprietors had issued and served a Pickwickian sense, and that they, in the language of the judge, should have understood the judge of court, without being in contempt for so doing.

"It was a queer case, and we are forced to draw the conclusion that Judge Morrill discovered that he had thrust his judicial foot into an inconvenient snare, from which he had been unable to withdraw as he so readily expected. Under no law of the United States, by any reasonable method of construction, could the article be regarded as a contempt of court. If all newspapers that comment upon cases before the courts should be considered in contempt, the courts would be unable to function. The doctrine of constructive contempt is being pretty well crushed out in this country."

We have seen more than one case of contempt in this Territory of late years wherein the cool and candid public were satisfied that a large amount of judicial impertinence, arbitrariness, and bad temper were manifested in wielding the relic of barbarism judicial discretion, for the instances were notable examples of judicial indiscretion. It is a power that should be either abolished or materially modified.

A Trip to Spring Lake Farm.

We have been requested to publish the following—

"On Wednesday last, the anniversary of the organization of the Fourth Ward Sunday school, the superintendent, teachers, children and members of the ward met at the School-house, at half past seven, with Bishop Jennings, the host, and members of the day, and after comfortably seating all hands in twenty-two wagons, with flags and banners, the party formed in line and proceeded to Spring Lake Farm.

At the farm, which we reached in good order, and proceeded to a very comfortable bower, when, after prayer and some good instructions from the Bishop and members of the committee, a general feast was made for the splendid lake, which is well supplied with food, and well furnished with new patent swings and quilts. The company engaged in various games until noon, when they proceeded to the bower or refreshment, after which dancing was commenced, and continued for about two hours, when the hosts and swains adjourned to the time of the company started to the City, well satisfied with the gentlemanly treatment and accommodations afforded by the proprietors of Spring Lake Farm, which we can recommend as a fine place of resort to superintendents of schools and all who wish to avail themselves of a day's rural enjoyment.
