framed with that intent. Perhaps many of those who participated had some religious tendencies, but it would not be too much to say that many others' could carry all they possesses of the article in their vest pockets. The Divine Being was, with the lips, however, requested to "provide able men who fear God-men of truth, hating covetousness, led by the wisdom of Gad." Would it be too much to say that if the Lord had taken some means of signifying what was His will in regard to the selections of men for high places is the nation, that the choice would not have been endorsed by that assembly, providing it did not designate the men they had decided upon? Doubtless the Lord would have been informed that the members proposed to attend to that business themselves, without His aid.

Incongruity'in prayers is exceedingly bad. There is, for instance, a transparent inconsistency in thanking the Lord for certain specified blessings enjoyed, and subsequently in the same petition asking, in what has the semblance of a spirit of mock humility, that the Great Being presumably ad-dressed forgive the petitioners their ingratitude. It amounts to asking and its depot is just the place for such pardon for not exhibiting a sentiment, kind of people. asserted in the first place to have been manifested. Intelligent men sre generally careful to make an exhibit of consistency in the requests they make of their fellowmen, but this element seems to be largely ignored when they make an appeal to a higher power.

The conventional prayer requested that the power of Providence be interposed to prevent such 'calamities as estilence, famine, war, sectional strife, anarchy, disorder, the reign of vice, crime and implety. A moment's thought will suggest that when these words were uttered certain sinister conditions already afflicting the nation and others threatening it were before the mental vision of the petitioner, But interposition of that character is predicated on something more than prayer. The nation must, to escape ruinous results prognosticated by existing causes and symptoms, act in unison with the principles of preservation that exist in the economy of a just God. The oppression of the weak by the strong, the enacting and administration of laws that bear unequally upon the various classes of the peoeffects that the divine economy has ordered shall follow causes that are planted and not uprooted.

Prayer in relation to the averting of ruinous conditions must, to prevail with the heavens, be joined to a reformation of conduct, or an elimination of the causes of anticipated disaster. Doubtless if the nation does not turn a sharp corner in the direction of reform, it will sail into breakers. If, however, the ship of state will be guided by the beacon light of the institutions of this government, its passage over the sea of history will be peaceful and prosperous, especially if there is a genuine and not a sham recognition of the Lord as the only safe pilot.

Men with high ping hats, decorated with good sized roosters, and men in uniforms impro-vised for the occasion, men with bad-ges, and men with nothing but very shabby apparel to distinguish them, all jostling each other in the streets and in the hotels. A peculiar feature of the British footman, or flunkey, is the "comb" which ornaments his shiny, silk chimney-pot. The Amer-ican politician does a little better; he ornaments his gray or black stove-pipe with a fall-fledged rooster, comb and all. Perhaps this is appropriate. The latter is virtually more of a foot-man, a flunkey, a tuft-hunter, to his political boss, than is the English foot-man to his industrial boss. which is as prettily if not so strikingly deceptive. Mr. Harwood's talent, however, evidently lies in landscape palating. Among many pictures of this class; which space will not permit mention of, the one most striking, because most familiar, to the writer, was a scene on the shore of Utah Lake near Lehi. In the back ground lies the lake, with the Oquirrh Mountains looming up behind. To the left a characteristic apple orchard, with here and there some tall shade trees. The and there some tall shade trees. The rest is the most happy delineation im-aginable of a humble country home. First, to the right of the orchard, the house—a log cabin, one room, dirt roof, a rickety chimney and a shed in front supported on cedar posts dug into the ground.

Pensions to the Widows. WASHINGTON, June 9.- The President has approved the act of Coogress providing that pensions heretofore or hereafter granted to widows of the soldiers of the war of the rebellion, shall commence at the date of the death of their husbands. This legisla-tion favorably affects all claims of the tion favorably affects all claims of the widows of the late war which have been filed in the pension office on or after July, 1880, and which have been allowed to commence from the date of the filing of the claims, but will not favorably effect the cases of such wid-ows as were filed before July, 1880, and which have been allowed. A pen-sion having already been granted in these cases from the date of their hus-band's death. The committee on pensions gives a band's death. The committee on pensions gives notice that in the settlement of cases under this law, for claims al-ready allowed no formal ap-pileation will be required, and that the services of an attorney will not be necessary. Widows en-titled under the said law need only write alletter giving their name'and their postoffice address and their certificate number, and their claims will be al-lowed with as little delay as practica-ble.
