

CAIRO IN 1907

CAIRO, Aug. 25.—Stand with me on the hill of the Citadel and take a look over Cairo. We are high above the River Nile, and far above the minarets of mosques which rise out of the vast plain of houses below. We are as far from the Mohammedan world as is the lip of the Atlantic from the heart. These people are accustomed to uttering the words of prayer that they forget the sense. The use of the word God is heard everywhere in the bazaars. The water carrier, who goes about with a pliskin upon his back, jingling his brass cups to announce his business, cries out, "May God be with me!" and his custom-high up as the tops of the pyramids, which stand out upon the yellow desert away off at the left. The sun is blazing; and there is a smoky haze over the Nile valley, but it is not dense enough to hide Cairo. The city, which lies right under us, is the largest on this continent, and one of the mightiest of the world. It now contains 1,000,000 inhabitants; and, in size, it is fast approximating Heliopolis and Memphis in the height of their glory.

Of all the Mohammedan cities of the world, Cairo is now growing the fastest. It already has only 100,000 less people than Constantinople. It is four times as big as Damascus, eight times as big as Bagdad, and 15 or 20 times the size of either Mecca or Medina, where the Prophet Mohammed was born and died. It has more than doubled its population since I last visited it, and with my glass I can now see the scaffolding about the new buildings which are rising here and there over the plains. The town now covers an area equal to 50 square sections, and the buildings are crowded together so that they form an almost continuous structure. The only trees to be seen are those in the new French quarter, which lies on the outskirts.

MOHAMMEDAN CAIRO.

The most of the city is of Arabian architecture. It is flat roofed, and is made up of yellowish-white buildings so crowded along narrow streets that they can hardly be seen at this distance. Here and there, out of the field of white, rise tall, round stone minarets, which pierce the sky and them. They dominate the whole city, and under each is a mosque. These mosques are the Mohammedan churches. There are hundreds of them in Cairo, and not a few have been recently erected. Every one has its worshippers, and upon every bazaar, five times a day, the muezzin Arabic priest calls the people to come to pray. There is a man now calling from the minaret of the mosque of Sultan Hassan, which is just under us. The mosque itself covers more than two acres, and the minaret is about half as high as the Washington monument. The priest is standing on a gallery, with a sounding board, and addressing him. His mosque is being repaired, and $200,000 will be spent upon it when the present plans are completed. Just next it is another mosque, recently begun, and all about us we can see evidences that Mohammedanism is by no means dead, and that these people worship God with their hearts, as well as with their tongues.

The Arabic mosque, which stands at my back, 50 men are now praying, and in the courtyard a score of others are washing themselves before they go in to make their vows of repentance to God and the prophet. Not far below me I can see the mosque el-Azhar, which has been in Mohammedan ownership for more than 1,000 years, and where something like 2,000 students are now learning the Koran and Koranic law.

During my stay in Tunis the Mohammedans were celebrating their tent or ramadan, and not a one of the vast population of Tunisia who believe in the prophet would take time to eat from noon to sunset, and to drink water, and not even wash their mouths. Here at Cairo I have seen the people preparing to take their pilgrimage to Mecca, ride and pose starting out on that long journey into the Arabian desert. At present many go part of the way by water. The ships leaving Alexandria are packed with a crowd of pilgrims, and there is a regular series from Port Sudan and other places on this side of the Red sea. They go across to Jeddah and there lay off their costly clothing and make their way inland, clad only in aprons and a piece of cloth over the left shoulder. This is so of the rich and the poor, the man and the woman, every gift and other offering for the sacred city and such gifts and the Egyptian government alone $250,000 a year. Not only the wealthy, but the Mohammedan rulers of the Sudan, send gifts, and I understand that the new railroad which has been recently completed from far up the Nile to Omdurman is to be used by these pilgrim parties. It is for the senior wife to look upon Mohammedanism as a dead religion.

A RELIGION OF THE LIPS.

And still I sometimes wonder whether does the same, and I venture the name of the Devil, I venture more frequently than in any other part of the heart. These people are accustomed to uttering the words of prayer that they forget the sense. The use of the word God is heard everywhere in the bazaars. The water carrier, who goes about with a pliskin upon his back, jingling his brass cups to announce his business, cries out, "May God be with me!" and his custom-vations are almost everywhere in evidence, native Cairo is much the same now as it was in the days of the Arabian Nights. These people believe the same as did then; they wear the same costumes, the women are as closely veiled, and all the characters of which Charles Kingsley describes in his novel "Hypatia." Like all of his class he is intelligent, and like most of them well dressed. The Coptics are among the shrewdest and most enterprising men in the world, and those who are connected with the prosperity now common in the valley of the Nile, they are growing in wealth. They are money lenders and are also land speculators. Many of them have offices under the government, and not a few have amassed fortunes. Some of them are very rich, and some can read the Bible by heart. They are not different from their neighbors in that they believe in having only one wife.

THE GIRLS OF CAIRO.

But the crowd in these streets is by no means all men. There are women scattered here and there though. And such women! Talk about the girls of Paris! These girls have pink-a-hoo veils. All their bodies with the exception of their eyes are hidden, and one has to look close through the slits in their veils to see whether their skins are white, black or brown. They are by no means good looking as they walk through the streets. Those of the better classes are clad in the black bonheur, made so full that they hide every outline of the person. Some have their cloaks tied in at the waist, and they look like black bed ticks walking upon legs. Here one raises her skirt, and you see that she has on zouave breeches, which fail to look like them. The girls in the European section are too narrow for such things, and you are crowded to the wall again and again for fear that the sponge feet of the camels may tread upon you. You are grazed by loaded donkeys, carrying grain, bricks or bags on their backs, and the donkey boy who is trotting behind is often so fat that he looks like an Egyptian or his wife calls upon you to get out of the way. The donkey is the best means of getting around through the native city and the cheapest. You may hire one for two hours for 20 cents, for a half day for 50 or 60 cents, and all day for a dollar. Every riding boy is numbered. My donkey today was named "California," and the number on his saddle was 327.

SOME QUEER CITIZENS.

Original Cairo is a city of donkeys and camels. In the French quarter you may have a modern cab for 15 cents a ride, or you may jump on the electric street cars and go a long distance for from 2½ to 5 cents, or you may even hire an automobile to carry you about the city. The streets are narrow for such things. The houses in the native city are too narrow for such things, and you are crowded to the wall again and again for fear that the sponge feet of the camels may tread upon you. You are grazed by loaded donkeys, carrying grain, bricks or bags on their backs, and the donkey boy who is trotting behind is often so fat that he looks like an Egyptian or his wife calls upon you to get out of the way. The donkey is the best means of getting around through the native city and the cheapest. You may hire one for two hours for 20 cents, for a half day for 50 or 60 cents, and all day for a dollar. Every riding boy is numbered. My donkey today was named "California," and the number on his saddle was 327.

The characters of the bazaars are odd to an extreme, and one must have an educated eye to know who they are. Take that man in a green turban he is looking up to his fellows. Your dragoon will tell you that he has a sure passport to heaven, and that the turban is a sign that he is a member of the platoon to Mecca, and thus earned the right to the colors of the prophet. Behind him comes a fine-feathered, yellow-part of the city is having a boom; and lots which sold for $10 a square yard two years ago are now bringing $30. There are instances where ground is selling for ten times as much as it did in 1905. Property is going up all over the section, and an enormous amount of building is being done. Rents are so rising that the poorer Europeans are moving out into the suburbs, and this city promises to have a suburban development just as we have about our American towns.

European Cairo is a city of wide streets, paved with asphalt. It is a city of electric lights and sanitary improvements. It has fine residences, surrounded by gardens filled with tropical plants and trees; and its better stores carry goods which would sell readily in Paris or New York. One can buy almost anything from anywhere in the world at these stores. This is especially so of such wares as the rich do-morning class.

The pedler of antiquities and fine china, of jewelry and of oriental rugs is also here in all his glory, and during the season he does a big business.

Cairo has many doctors and dentists.

The doctors charge $5 a visit whether you see them at their offices or at your hotel. The dentists charge $10 a visit, and they are not here for their health. The town is one of newspapers, libraries and clubs. It has its daily journals, in which you can read the telegrams in French, English and Arabic; and it has its loudmouthed newsmen, who cry the papers on the streets. My shoes are blacked every morning by a negro, and a dozen pairs of them cost 20 cents a shoe.

Cairo has a good postal system, with a letter delivery several times a day, and it has hundreds of policemen, both on foot and on horseback. A policeman stands in the center of every street crossing to see that all carriages go to the left instead of the right; and there are enough police in every section to make life and property safe.

CAIRO'S BIG HOTELS.

Cairo is one of the winter resorts of the world, and is thronged during the season with European and American tourists. There are thousands of rich citizens here every year, and they leave millions of dollars in Egypt. Thirty thousand tourists visited the valley of the Nile last winter, and it is safe to say that they left upwards of $10,000,000.

The hotels of Cairo increase in size and number every year. They are run by syndicates with large capital and never pay big dividends. Shepheard's, which is so well known everywhere, has 400 beds. The Savoy has 180. The Hotel Continental 300, the Ghezireh palace can accommodate 400 guests at one time, and the Mena hotel, right under the Pyramids, has 180 rooms. All these hotels have modern improvements and they have room for them. At Shepheard's I pay $8 a day for a double-bedded room for myself and son, and in addition there is a charge of 10 cents a day for electric lights. If I have my breakfast in my room that is an extra, and if I am not in the dining room, at just the moment when dinner begins I find the doors closed, and have to go to the public room.
