New York has one school garden, an admirable one to be sure, and the pride of its founder, Mrs. Henry Parsons, Boston has nine school gardens, all in charge of the Boston school garden committee. An interesting report has just been prepared by the secretary, Miss Anne Withington. In addition to the nine gardens described Miss Withington tells of others started in various sections at the request of teachers. Wherever the bright influence of the street and the summer air is strongest there the committee is ever ready to help effect the evil with a patch of ground for children to cultivate. Concluding her report, Miss Withington says:

"There are two underlying motives in this garden work of the Boston public schools, but these two motives have a common root. The first, the desire to lead children into a knowledge of and love of nature and to translate into terms which the city child can understand, the pleasures and possibilities of life outside the city, is, of course, the inevitable outcome of any serious consideration of our social and economic conditions, whether it be from the point of view of physical health, of industrial freedom, or of the preservation of democratic institutions. It can be said, even by the least apprehensive, that our great cities grow great because into them flow daily and hourly a stream of country-bred men and women who make good the depletion of population caused by city life, and that the greatest obstacle in the struggle of the city wage earner for industrial betterment is his divorce from the land and its life-sustaining resources, and, lastly, that the most serious menace to the democracy of our time has come into being by the massing of people in such numbers that they must needs delegate to the few the powers of government, which can be rightfully exercised only by the many."

In Woman's World.

Always allow cold water to run over scalds before using them for poultices or serving them whole. The oil used to cover them is rarely of the best and sometimes it is positively bad. The delicate flavor of the fish is not affected by the cold water.

Blueberry pies are old favorites, somewhat indigestible, it is true, but dear to the heart of almost every New Englander. A cookery expert gives the following recipe, which is couched for To each cupful of sifted flour add a heaping teaspoonful of baking powder. Three cupfuls of flour is a sufficient quantity. To the flour and baking powder add a heaping tablespoonful of sugar and a little salt. Beat the mixture very light, and a cup and a half of milk. Make a hole in the center of the flour and pour in the milk gradually, stirring all the time. Add two level tablespoonfuls of melted butter and two cups of poured blueberries. Bake in hot oven.

Blueberry pie is celebrated. It is best when baked English fashion in a deep dish and eaten with custard. A small teaspoon should be placed in the center of the dish to prevent the crust from falling in. Serve cream and powdered sugar with the pie.

For summer cottages, and indeed for all simple homes, India print curtains make charming bedspreads. The cheery effect of these prints are gaudy and will not stand washing. The better quality are in neat colors and are very good in design and coloring. The yellows and greens are especially attractive.

This is for the peach season. A writer in What to Eat tells the old tradition, still responsible, that the peach is the best of complexion-branders. "A diet peaches throughout the season to peaches and cream with whole wheat bread and nut butter, with only milk, lemonade or distilled water as a beverage. It is claimed will transform the most unfortunate skin into a velvety smoothness and brilliant, delicate bloom." No one is likely to restrict herself for an entire season to such a diet, but it is worth quoting.

DRESSY COATS OF FUR.

Fashion is clamoring so loudly for variation in all of the season's modes, that even the furs bear the imprint. In times past women have been content to have fur garments in staple styles, letting the richness of the pelt used take the place of dominating in design. But they are no longer content with plain fur garments, demanding that they shall be as elaborate in detail and with individual in style as those of cloth. One of the best furs for novelties and can be treated in practically the same way as a velvet or plush. Of exceptional beauty is a little Persian lamb coat, almost close fitting and very short. The front of the coat shows designs of silk braid in the center of which are set medallions of velvet, all of this work being done directly on the fur. A prettily formed of color is given by the vest in ornate embroidery, which continues to form the small standing collar. The sleeves of the coat are novelties in style, having deep bell shaped cuffs set to puff tops, the velvet medallions surrounded by braid trimmed the sleeves. It will be quite a fashion this winter to combine different furs in one costume. For instance, a hat of one fur being worn with a coat of another. Chinchilla is the most popular of the millinery fur. The delicacy of the fur as well as its beautiful color makes it especially adapted for this purpose. Floral trimmings continue to be used on Chinchilla hats. Sometimes a single rose in bright color affords the only relief from the soft tones of the fur which composes the entire hat.
