Last Night's Dispatches.

CONGRESSIONAL.

SENATE.

WASHINGTON, S.—During Eaton's speech he was interrupted by the speaker who read the election returns from Alabama, saying that were Associated Press dispatches.

Eaton—The Associated Press is not under the control of the democratic party, not by a long deal.

Patterson—The Associated Press is not under the control of the democratic party in the South, but every agent of the Associated Press in the South is a democrat.

Eaton—Well, I suppose they could not get anybody else there who could read and write (distinctly) on the floor and in the gal-eries). I understand it is under the charge of a man named Orton, whom I have met, and I believe he is a republican.

Spencer—I believe the Associated Press is under the control of Mc-Simonton, and Orton has (dis-
charge of a man named Orton,
is a republican.

Sargent—My impression is that Simonton is a republican. I think he is a democrat.

Eaton—I don't say it is a discredit to him by any manner of means, but when you can name one to whom it is a credit, I will be very happy to know it.

Sargent—I am very glad that the senator will admit so much in favor of his republican.

The Senate then considered Morton's resolution for printing the documents about the Hamburg massacre.

Eaton, continuing, said he rejoiced that no democratic senator had yet found occasion to attack the characters of either of the republican members of the Senate, and Vice-President. He recognized these gentlemen of highly respectable ability. Tilden stood highly respected by all the republicans. He was a man of great character and high standing in the country. Concerning Hendricks he had a word to say, because he had been the subject of much discussion.

Eaton said he had read the speech of Morton at Richmond, Indiana, where he said colored men were not fit to be admitted into the suffrage of the country. He said he was gradually elevated to it. Did anybody blame him? Did any honest man blame Hendricks for voting against the constitutional amendment twelve years ago. He did not then believe the African race capable of self-government. Nelson did not. Morton, Hendricks and Tilden both say they accepted the amendments. The republican party always were true to the Constitution.
Could the republicans say as much as they did in 1860 to 1876?
Edmunds had dwelt on the word rebel, which ought not to be spoken on the floor. It was done to goad the southern members into an action unpardonable to the north. He justified Texas in making a new state constitution, even as New York did with Robert Smith.

Robert Smith.
He said he was ever of the Union. It did not become the senator to talk about a democratic majority in the state by the republican party. He quoted from the Washington Republican, showing that the democrats yesterday carried Alabama by a majority of three to one. He said he was satisfied, and said, let the honorable senator weep. There was not a single wrong, but a fair, honest, good election.

Spencer said he heard that many colored people in Alabama were so intimidated yesterday that they refused to vote. He believed it was true.

Eaton said he disbelieved it.
Southern blacks, at the instigation of the white press, had been resented. He said he was glad to hear that the democrats were getting together to prevent any colored man voting the democratic ticket, but that time was passing. Yesterday's election showed the republicans were true to the Constitution.

Patterson reviewed the message of the President and accompanying documents, and said that U. S. senators were not to be trusted.
He said he was not a democrat, and did not transmit the information in regard to Hamburg to the President until he had ascertained the truth. He said he was not a democrat, and did not transmit
