

TACTFUL MRS. ROOSEVELT

UNDoubtedly Mrs. Roosevelt is as tactful as the president is brilliant. It is a large quantitative comparison. I admit—yes, because there have been no sensational results of her diplomacy and strategy, no flustered French epigrams put to her credit by the most daring and inventive of society reporters, no fact to which she has emotionally subscribed; no movement of woman's political clambering that she has espoused—her place in the new women's world is adjudged small.

She could do so much with her position and yet she doesn't stand for anything. It was the verdict of a prominent English suffragette who was visiting in Washington this winter. Now the true story of the interview from which the British suffragette drew this conclusion may illustrate in a way just what Mrs. Roosevelt does stand for.

It was during one of the afternoon "at homes" which Mrs. Roosevelt has introduced into the midst of the more formal functions of the White House and by which she extends a delightful hospitality to the friends and visitors at the capital who have left cards at the White House—a means of personal acknowledge and no other mistress of the White House has attempted to use under the strict law of social procedure in Washington the wife of the president is exempt from returning any call.

Hence Mrs. Roosevelt's innovation has been greatly appreciated. She stands charmingly poised, receiving alone in the big east room with all the simplicity of an unofficial hostess in a small home, drawing room, and the guests feel that they have been included in the friendship of a cultured woman as well as having grasped hands with the wife of the president of their country.

The suffragette approached Mrs. Roosevelt and immediately began a statement of her strenuous desire to see women demand equal rights at the polls. And Mrs. Roosevelt listened.

"And now, Mrs. Roosevelt," concluded the suffragette, "won't you send some word of your advocacy of this great cause to our London club? I shall take great pleasure in delivering it."

"Why, I have never allied myself with the equal suffrage effort even here in the United States," temporized Mrs. Roosevelt, and turned to greet the next guest. But the suffragette would not be gainsaid. She dived on Mrs. Roosevelt's left and at the first interval darted in with:

"But you surely want to help woman's rights to victory?"

"I want," smiled Mrs. Roosevelt in her quiet, decisive way, "women to have everything that can make them happy, but I sometimes feel afraid that in the hurrying over one victory for these new rights for women there may slip away a dozen of the old prerogatives we have always had just because we were women. I really think it's a great deal finer thing to have a husband or a brother or a son act on your advice than to do the thing yourself."

That is what Mrs. Roosevelt "stands for." A clear-headed guardianship of her husband's and children's interests and the merging of her personality into the leavening power of their achievements. And Mrs. Roosevelt has successfully proved her principle of this subtle line of woman's power—Harley Spencer, in Human Life.

SOUTH AFRICAN DESERT.

Two Vryburg men, Sidney Smith, a well known local farmer, and J. N. Brymer, have had a terrible experience in the Kalahari Desert, where they were three days under a blazing sun with neither food nor water, and hardly came through alive.

They left home together in a Cape cart drawn by six oxen to visit George Lennox of Kingsdown, a farm some distance into the desert. The travelers were mainly relying for their water supply on the tramways, a species of wild melon which grows abundantly on the sand and conserves its water for months, but they found to their dismay that these had all been consumed by the flocks and herds of the nomadic natives of the Kalahari. The meager stock of water they had brought with them soon gave out, and after trekking for two days without a drink the oxen collapsed. The travelers were still about 50 miles from their destination.

Abandoning the cart and oxen they determined to make the rest of the journey on foot. Eight miles' tramp through the heavy sand reduced Mr. Brymer to a state of exhaustion, and leaving him behind, Mr. Smith toiled on with his native servant in the teeth of a scorching wind to attempt to make the nearest water. Mr. Lennox's farm, which was his only hope, in six hours he had become quite dead, one eye was almost blind, his tongue had shriveled up and his palate and lips were coated with a thick skin. He had left Brymer at 9 a. m. At dawn next morning his Kaffir boy threw up the sponge, and, sad at heart, Smith had to push on with his collie dog as his only companion.

An hour or two later he was overtaken by two young Transvaalers, Messrs. Gerber and Le Roux, on horseback. They had lost a horse and a mule from thirst, not far from the point where Mr. Brymer had been left lying on the veld. They had found Brymer still alive, but having no water themselves were unable to help, and had pushed on for the farm. Le Roux was in a state of collapse from thirst, having to be held on his horse by Gerber. The two mounted men went on ahead, promising to send back help to Smith and the others.

When still a long distance from Mr. Lennox's farm Mr. Smith met some Damara women refugees from German Southwest Africa, carrying water in gourds on their heads. Incredible as it may seem, these inhuman people absolutely refused to give Mr. Smith either water or assistance. Eventually he managed to obtain a small cupful by force, but he was too exhausted to struggle for more. At this point his fine collie lay down and afterward succumbed to thirst.

Slightly invigorated by his meager refreshment, Mr. Smith toiled on. The sun was now high overhead, and the heat intense. He was following the course of an old river bed, and fortunately was able to obtain some slight shelter from a few trees along the course. His method was to dash forward for a couple of hundred yards to the nearest tree and then lie down to recuperate for the next effort. So he held to his task until at length Mr. Lennox's farm came in sight. Here kind hands took him in charge and tended him so well that after a few hours he was able to talk rationally and walk about.

Mr. Henn of the camel corps of the Cape mounted police, who happened to be at the farm with his camel, immediately saddled up and set out with the most commendable diligence to search for the poor fellows who had been forced to remain in the desert. Thanks to Mr. Henn's promptitude and energy, the lives of Mr. Brymer and the natives were saved, although they were in the last stages of exhaustion, and presented a most deplorable sight when they were brought in.—London Telegraph.

AN OLD TIME DOUBLE HULLED STEAMBOAT.

The engine of the boat shown in the picture was built in 1788 by William Symington for Patrick Miller, who placed it on the deck of a double hulled pleasure boat. This boat was operated on Dalwhinnie loch at a speed of five miles an hour. This was nineteen years before Fulton launched the Clermont.

FEED HORSES BY CLOCKWORK

A provision merchant in Oklahoma has invented an ingenious contrivance by which, it is stated, he is able to feed his horses without personal attendance, through the medium of a 4s. 6d. American alarm clock.

In a small office adjoining the stable the clock is placed on a shelf. Attached to the winding-up key is a piece of copper wire, and this is fastened to a small brass roller that runs over a wooden rod. At the end of the rod is a heavy weight. When the clock "goes off" the wheel is drawn over the rod and releases the weight, which falls to the floor.

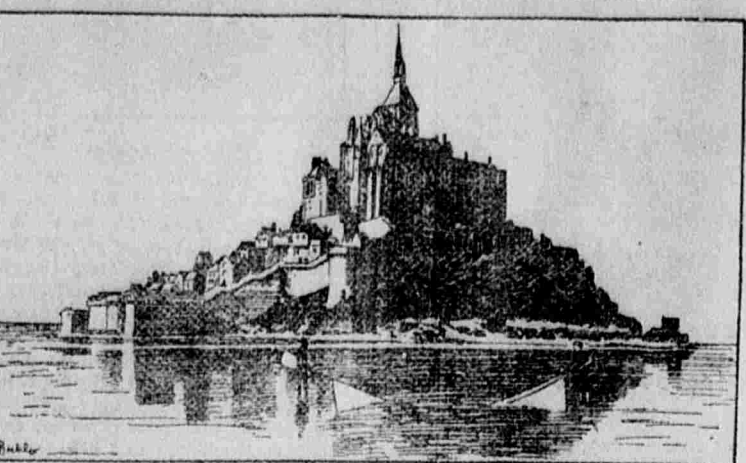

The corn box is filled overnight, and immediately the weight is released a small door at the bottom of the box flies open and the corn falls into the manger. The horses never fail to turn up at the sound of the alarm, knowing what is to follow, and when the driver turns up, say, at 7 or 8 o'clock, the animals are ready for taking the shafts. Another advantage to be gained by the method is that the horse need never be placed in the shafts before the breakfast has had time to digest.—ITB-Bits.

MONT ST. MICHEL, THREATENED WITH DESTRUCTION.

The picturesque middle age buildings on Mont St. Michel, off the coast of Brittany, are now threatened with destruction by the sea. Thirty years ago a dike connecting the island with the mainland was built, and the effect has been to transform the waves into battering rams, which have undermined the walls. A movement for its preservation has been set on foot.
