

more time in which to sketch, he will take boat at Lamon, Costa Rica, and go to the river Magdalena, South America, (the river Sillon and the land of Zarahemla in the Book of Mormon) and there, as we have seen, is a level land. Along the isthmus we shall do considerable exploring but the main part of this work will be done along the banks of the Magdalena River. To be plain, we are going to look for the ruins of the city of Zarahemla as well as those of other cities. From Magdalena our road will lay southward to "Toluca."

"Tomorrow we roll out, and in the next six weeks we will travel through what is reported to be the wildest and most difficult part of the trip. I feel certain, however, that with the blessing of God, we will be able to complete the journey in safety, and I feel certain too, with His blessings and the guidance of His Spirit we shall be able to make discoveries that shall be of value to our people. I am sure that we are with us as good men as ever labored with in my life. They keep the Word of Wisdom and the commandments of God to the best of their ability."

see John D. Rockefeller and also to Pitsburg to see representatives of Andrew Carnegie. He was a man of suspicious and impractical character, the magnates simply put him down as visionary. They offered to furnish him appliances in the plants by which he could produce steel, and he was to buy his product, but he had not skill as an inventor. He has dreamed of years of becoming rich from his secret, and he makes heavy demands for any portion of his project.

He is a mild mannered yet tactful. He is tall, thin and slightly bent. His cadaverous appearance is accentuated by a long white beard and before he went to prison he wore his hair long and a black beard.

He is a pleasant man to converse with, rather pleasant man to converse with, of the family, after the marriage of Clara and Daley, have two children, Clara, the daughter who caused so dark a trouble in the family, and Daley, now 15 years old.

After a lifelong study of metallurgy and a constant battle to develop his ideas, Mr. Dawson has now given to his wife the credit for the realization of his life ambition, "She always encouraged me to persevere," he says, "and gave me counsel and advice which was the means of my disengaging myself from the shackles of my secret up to the present time.

Eccentric, yet kindly disposed to all, most persons in Des Moines believe Mr. Dawson would never have harmed young Scott had he not been caught in the act of the action of Governor Shaw in paroling him is regarded universally with unmixed approval.
