"Well, then," said Jedediah, "I believe the factory in point of fact, stands in Mr. Brown's parish."

"Perhaps in mere point of geography, the line may run this side of the factory, but in point of fact the people are much nearer to us than to him. The fact is, Mr. Pettis, it is to our interest to take care of this population, or they will corrupt the state of morals amongst us. These roving, idle young men and boys, many of them quite bright and active, will be leading away the boys of this parish; even now the Sabbath is dreadfully profaned among us."

"I'll risk my children. I can't cut down all the dock weed or clear off all the caterpillars from my neighbors trees, but I can keep the weeds off my own farm."

"I doubt it," said Mr. Service; "but if you could, it would be less work to cut down one stalk of dock weed, green in your neighbor's field than to hoe up a thousand young docks after the wind had seeded your farm with them. If any one would have made it their business to clear the caterpillars off the wild cherry-tree at the head of the street you would have saved two day's work in your orchards about."

"I know that," said Mr. Pettis; "but I ain't going to do other people's work. That tree stands on Jim Stenton's ground and if he don't attend to it I ain't going to do it for him, I'm sure."

"Not if it fills every tree in your orchard with caterpillars," said Mr. Service.

"I can take care of my own trees," said Mr. Pettis. "I'd rather do twice the work on my own place than do work that isn't my business."

"Mr. Pettis," said Mr. Service, have you thought anything of that doctrine I spoke to you about?"

"What doctrine?"

"Look not every man on his own things, but every man on the things of others." What do you think of that doctrine? It's in the Bible, as plain as the doctrine of election."

At this point Mr. Pettis began to have secret doubts of the validity of Paul's epistles; but he did not venture to assert them in so many words, so he passed the grape dish again to his minister, and said:
