EFFECTS OF OVERBEARING. A tree has a certain amount of enrult, and at first devotes its efforts to fruit. More than this, there is only a small growth made and the tree cannot winter without being injured. Very few if any fruit buds will be formed for the following year's crop and the tree must spend the season in recuperating and developing fruit buds for overboard again the following season. If the limbs are not propped up many will be broken, thus giving the tree a ragged and unsymmetrical shape. General Observance of Memorial

'V th peaches the aim should be to leave the fruit at least six inches apart. However, the size and strength of the limbs will determine this to some extent; slender limbs lighteen inches long can probably support only one fruit. In thinning plums the distance apart to leave the fruits cannot be so definitely stated because they are produced in clusters. The clusters should be broken up so that only two or three fruits remain, the idea being not to have the fruit touch when ripe. Aprithick as peaches, that is so as to be two inches apart when ripe. With apples and pears the clusters should be thinned down to one or two of the best

BERRY GROWING. Methods of a Successful Montana Fruit Grower.

The following paper was read before the meeting of the Horticultural society of Montana at Plains, February last: Raspberries and strawberries have been assigned to me by the committee and in response will simply give the system which I have practiced and which has proved successful with me. I will take up raspberries first. RASPBERRIES.

The first requisite is good plants. Don't go to your neighbor and get a lot of plants from a run down plantation of which you do not even know the varieties. Of course if your neighbor has good sorts, properly cultivated, they are as good as any, otherwise buy from some reliable firm as near home as you can get what you want. Then be sure the varieties you selec-

The purple sorts require more room between the rows, as they make an immense growthease frequently measuring ten and twelve feet. The first season I give clean cultivation, using a one-horse cultivator and weeder, keeping a dust much, and do not irrigate unless the plants are suffering, which is very seldom. Before it plant is set the ground should be in fine tilth and treated to a generous coat of barnyard manure and early the second with straw, chips or any refuse that will decay and ferilize—pea vines, vegetable tops, etc. It is astenishing how quickly it all rots and is absorbed by the soil. This mulching serves, three purposes: It holds the moisture, keeps weeds down and the berries to pick the fruit when so mulched, especially after a rain, when one can pick Immediately after fruiting, I go through and cut out all the canes that have fruited, also all weaklings. It there are weeds pull them, and if seeds have formed carry them away to be burned. Later on, before hard freezing, the blackcaps and purple varieties are laid down. It is not a long or difficult lask, and it pays to do this even if your bushes do not winter kill, for the alternate freezing and maturing as many seeds as possible. This habit is a provision of nature for the reproduction of the species. This great production of pits exhausts a tree so that there is little strength left for the development of the fleshy part of the fruit. More than this, there is only a canes to the hill and cut back the tips of the reds. The blacks are pinched ripen its wood so as to pass a severe back the previous year when about winter without being injured. Very eighteen inches high. When this is done and the trimmings carried to the brush pile, I sgain mulch with straw, etc., as that given the previous season is by this time incorporated with soil. This method with me, has produced bountiful crops of magnificent berries. which always bring top of the market prices. STRAWBERRIES.

With strawberries, set in rows three feet apart, so as to cultivate with a horse, and put plants twelve or eighteen inches distant in the rows. What I said of getting good raspberry plants is applicable to strawberries—set none but the best. After marking and beruits, the greater will be the supply of food for each and the result will be larger size, better color, better quality, and higher market prices, and the satisfaction of producing an extra good article. The tree will make extra good article. The tree will make berries do not feed any distance from berries do not feed any distance from the plants and fertilizers, to benefit the plants and fertilizers, to benefit the plants and fertilizers. and the satisfaction of producing an extra good article. The tree will make a moderate growth, set fruit buds for next year's crop, and ripen is wood so that it will not be liable to be injured them, must be accessible to the feeding so that it will not be liable to be injured by the weather. With varieties that will naturally produce crops biennially thinning will tend to encourage the habit of bearing annual crops, Experiments have shown that one year's thinning may influence the two following crops. In the writer's work with plums and apricots this was very noticeable. Trees which were thinned in 1837 gave from two to eight times 28 much fruit in 1838 as did unthinned trees of the same varieties. It should the plant back to much fruit in 1838 as did unthinned trees of the same varieties. It should be remarked that there was a light set of fruit in 1808 not enough in fact to require thinning. The trees thinned in 1807 did not set as much fruit in 1809 as did the unthinned trees but it was more evenly distributed and a portion had to be removed. With apricots in 1831, the trees thinned early and severely produced fruits of such size that seventeen weighed one pound. With the unthinned trees of the same vare its twenty-eight and one-third fruits were required for one pound. During the seasons of 1898 and 1899 the trees thinned early and severely in 1897 could readily be picked out by their large, and more evenly distributed fruit.
