It would surprise an American prize-fighter to have his trainer make him study anatomy thoroughly as an essential to perfect physical education. Yet that is what the Jap jiu jitsu stu-dent must learn. He must know every muscle, small and great, of the body, know just where are certain weak spots that, being pressed upon, will put his enemy instantly out of action. Four years of constant, patient training are required. The student must keep his temper imperturbably. If he shows a passionate or irritable disposi-tion, he is dismissed as a student of jiu jitsu. that he should speak with "a" hat on -any fellow's hat; any old hat in fact. Aware of the wide range of choice al-lowed him. Mr. Gladstone grabbed the first hat extended to him. It happened to be that of Sir Joseph Lees, which is many sizes too big for him. But that many sizes to big for him. But that made no difference. It was a hat and it sufficed to enable him to let loose the pent up flood gates of his oratory, without running the risk of any dire pains and penalties. Time was when no member would have ventured to appear in the house with any other headgear than a tail slik hat, "a stove pipe," as it is called by the vulgar. And custom also pre-scribed that he should wear a frock coat. It is true that an old Irish pat-riot-John Martin-did appear with a white, low-crowned hat, but it is a tradition that the speaker called him to his room and remonstrated with him for his violation of time-honored traditions. But the advent of the working man member, which began in 1880, wrought a change as regards the requirement that members should wear a uniform head gear and coat of a prescribed cut and color. A working man member of parliament who appeared in a silk hat and a frock coat would have been mobbed by his constituency. There-fore exceptions had to be made in his favor, and the breach made soon became a wide one. Members now wear any hats they please, from "billy-cocks" to "bowlers," but parliament is still as rigidly insistent as ever when a hat must and must not be worn.

T. PETERSBURG, March 19 .--There is not a more picturesque or impressive figure in the Russian empire today than that of Father John of Cronstadt, the great miracle worker of the Greek church, the uncrowned pope of the czar's dominions, who has come back again conspicuously before the world through the religious ceremonies which mark the departure of the fighting men for the scene of conflict in the east. Father John's parting blessing is sought by the highest and the lowest, and almost the last act of Admiral Makaroff, who has just taken command of the fleet at Port Arthur, before leaving Russia was to go to the Cathedral of St. Andrew in Cronstadt to receive the sacrament at the hands

Father John is a living illustration of the manner in which a man may rise from the humblest circle to the high places in the Greek church are reserved for the celebate cle gy, and Father John is married. It is taid that when he first took orders Father John meant to embrace a monastic life, but that it was revealed to him that he could accomplish more good by mix-ing with the people in the manner of the founder of his, religion. Accord-ingly he took a wife and lived as a man among men. That he chose the right course is abundantly proved by the crowds which besiege his humble dwelling in Constadt, when he is there
