A PRESBYTERIAN MINISTER ON MODERN CHRISTIANITY.

been making a speech, in which he told his hearers some very pointed truths. They are worth repeating, as they are true and are evidently the result of deep thought. They differ also very much from the vapid nonsense and fulsome from the vapid nonsense and fulsome self-flattery usually dealt out on such self-flattery dealt of the variety of the very cabinet minister should feel to tender his resignation. We are dealt would feel to the same su self-flattery usually dealt out on such occasions, and are, therefore, very refreshing. In dealing with the subject of Christianity he is led to draw a con-Christianity—between the impotency of the one and the vigor of the other.

He save:

Christianity—between the impotency purpose. The money belonging to the company, he says, is not, nor never was, in his charge, but is in the treasury of have exploded. The Government losses He says:

He can offer no solution of this great mystery, he says; but he perceives one cause which may have helped to bring appointed to watch over all animals in about the evils, which, he is forced to admit, exist. The early church was one, while the so-called Christianity of one one one one, while the so-called Christianity of one one of the so-called Christianity of one of God, ever will be an uncompromising the country country to define the country country country and the country country country and the country country country and the country country and t later ages has been torn into sects, which place diseased cattle in quarantine, or mens, therefore they feel it due to their and eternal enemy. have hated and persecuted each other as cordially and cruelly as their common foes could have done. As we read his utterances we are surprised that a Presbyterian church could listen to them without being startled. Mr. Fitzgerald is evidently a man who thinks for himself, and is not afraid to express his thoughts. He says:

Editor Descret News:-Yesterday, 29th inst., I delivered my eleventh lecture, in the Big Cottonwood meeting house, and in the evening my twelfth, in the 13th Ward Assembly Rooms in this city. Brother Edwin Rushton spoke at both meetings, on silk production and its manufacture into sewing silk. I am extremely happy to see the kind interest which the Bishops and the people feel towards the introduction our deliverance from the present ruinous system of buying and importing from abroad, when the elements of our soil, air and water, favored with a propitious climate, are burdened with all we need, and the skill of our excellent craftsmen goes begging, or lies idle and neglected. Why, it is a policy that will entail upon us and our children after us eternal vassalage and miserable dependence. The silk industry thoroughly introduced among us, will, while it brings immense wealth and independence to our people, be the forerunner of perhaps less profitable, but equally as essential industries. We have a growing market for raw and manufactured silk at home, while our surplus will meet a ready market abroad, and our silk worm eggs will also be in great demand in the silk growing districts of the old world.

England is not a silk producing country, and yet she employs an immense amount of capital in its manufacture.
