

THE REBEL AND THE PSALMIST

Port Elizabeth, Cape Colony.—I have been to church—to a church in a little dorp on the Port Elizabeth-Graaff Reinet line, a white-washed, square-cut kirk, and ugly.

A village where a handful of khaki-clad militia-men play at guarding a bridge, and the stories of Transvaal atrocities are believed as the Gospel.

What I heard there can be heard in any Dutch Reformed church in South Africa—in Graaff Reinet, in Uitenhage, in Somerset East, even, it is whispered, in effect, in Capetown.

The dream of a United African nation is dying hard.

The Dutch colonists are only now grasping the significance of their shadowy ideal and the vague, shapeless vision of a separate national life has, in the moment of the realization of its hopelessness, assumed a certain tangibility. Nothing is more patient than the most casual observer than the fact that it is only during the past two months that the leaders of the "New National" movement in the Cape Colony have seen the impossibility of the fulfillment of their dream.

At the beginning of the war a general rising throughout the colony would have put altogether a different complexion upon matters, but the malcontents were confident of the success of the Republican friends and, at the worst, of European intervention, and so they

of the church bell, in twos, singly, in parties, and in families, recognizing with a glance such of their friends as were already seated.

The bell stopped, and a little hunched man, droningly asserted itself. And then, accompanied by one of his deacons, the predikant himself entered and ascended the pulpit. The organ waited itself to sleep, and the predikant adjusted his glasses.

NO NAMES.

There were spirit and life in the hymns, many of which were sung without as much as a glance at the book, for the congregation had beguiled many a long evening on lonely farms and isolated homesteads awaiting them over, not so much from any great religious zeal or piety as from that desire to kill time which moves the convict to master the contents of his prayer-book.

Then there were lessons and prayers, chapters from the Old Testament of people in bondage and their delivery, prayers that this trouble which is in the Land may pass, that the heart of the Oppressor might be softened, that the Vengeance of the Lord might descend and smite the Destroyer, that Israel be delivered from the hands of its enemies, that the Philistines might be swept into the sea—yes, even as the wind sweeps the locust.

The predikant prayed with fervor—with head uplifted, with hands clasping and unclasping in agony of spirit. In his prayers he did not refer by name people who tried to hide themselves from the rifles of the burghers by arraying their bodies in mud-colored cloth? The congregation murmured a sympathetic appreciation of this sarcasm. What of these men? Truly, the Psalmist said, they were corrupt, they had done abominable things, there was no one who had done good; no, not one.

What of the wasted lands in the north? What of the dishonored homes and the blackened walls of the once prosperous farmhouse? What of—?—again that awful story—that Horror, made doubly authentic by reason of the place of delivery.

He told the story, the bald, crude tale, carrying, to a white Englishman, its own refutation in every syllable, and the congregation held its breath.

He told the story, so that a man seated in the next pew to myself half rose from his seat and, like a man who tries to shout in a dream and finds that he can but whisper, muttered: "There is time yet, there is time."

So that a girl rose from her seat, tittering and whimpering, and was led out.

"FRIENDS."

And the sermon went on. The Lord had looked down upon the oppressor, and had visited him with affliction—with disaster on disaster. Colenso, Stormberg, Makersfontein had come like a thunderbolt upon the world. It was the divine warning to turn from the path of oppression, to open the eyes of a blind nation.

And how had the warning been taken?

Had the nation heeded the voice? No. It had prosecuted its unrighteous designs, its unholy object. It had gone from worse to worse; it had become filthy.

Had they no knowledge, these iniquitous people, who had brought war and desolation to the country, whose path might be prolonged if people in general would exercise more judgment regarding their diet.

Medical science demonstrates that the presence of alkaloids, or tannic acid, in food is the direct cause of indigestion and dyspepsia, the knowledge of which led to the widespread substitution of cereal products for both coffee and tea.

California produces the best and most palatable coffee and tea substitute now on the market—Pigrune Cereal. This perfect food beverage consists of 54 per cent fruits and 46 per cent grains. It is a rich, nourishing drink. When poured into the cup it has the rare amber color of the purest coffee. Those suffering from dyspepsia or nervousness will appreciate Pigrune. It is a boon to the invalid and healthy people enjoy it. None but coffee experts can tell the difference between Pigrune and the best Mocha and Java. Ask your grocer for Pigrune Cereal—the perfect table beverage.

had been marked by much blood and burning? These people, who are dead to all dictates of conscience, to all honor and pity? Did they not realize that at the eleventh hour the Lord would save His people?

Oh, that the salvation of Israel would come out of Zion! Did his brethren understand what that passage meant?

The predikant paused and leaned forward over the pulpit, and there was a silence. Did they understand that the people of the captivity looked to their own kindred for deliverance from their bondage?

Another pause, and the congregation shifted uneasily in their seats.

Thus abruptly the sermon ended, and the people dispersed, some walking, some driving. Group by group they scattered, parting with limp shakes of great horny hands—the elder men in gloomy silence, the younger men with mutterings of threats and hints of startling things to be.

I passed down towards the little village that staggers from the church at one end to the naked veldt at the other, passed by the little camp, answering the sentry's challenge. There was a rattle of wheels behind me. It was the predikant driving back with one of his flock. I stood on one side to allow them to pass. As the trap neared the little roadside camp a bayonet glittered in the moonlight, and the horses were pulled up sharp.

"Halt! Who goes there?"

Back came the answer, prompt, and clear, and gibbering.

played that waiting game which so happily fits the back-veldt indolent.

Now it is that, with all the impotent rage of strong men caught napping, platform, pulpit, and press thunder forth denunciation of the conqueror. Now it is that every method that human ingenuity can devise, every effort that leaders and interested organizers can put forth, every malign, the calculated to fire the blood of the unlearned and intensify the already existing hatred, is being employed to the undoing of the English.

Curious to see for myself what manner of thing a political sermon is, I attended an evening service not far from here.

The church, grim and bleak, was half filled. There was not great display of color, no attempt at anything startling in shape of dress. Black was the hue, and home-made severity the cut. The worshippers sat bolt upright in their uncomfortable pews, and the hoot-squeak of the late comer and the occasional snuff or apologetic cough were the only sounds that broke the silence. There were elderly men in irreproachable broadcloth, with sombre banded hats. There were young men greatly daring in fanciful suits, but lacking originality in cravats. Stout Boer women in broad silk, and plump Dutch girls with expressionless eyes. They came in, keeping step to the monotonous clang to the Boer republics; he simply asked for Divine intervention for the Lord's chosen. He did not speak of England; he said Philistines and Amalekites. He did not refer directly to Sir Alfred Milner nor to Mr. Chamberlain, but with all the passion he could command he called for vengeance on the false counselors who had initiated the persecution of the people of the land. He prayed, and the congregation punctuated his prayers with deep sighs and "amens," and I, a Philistine in the House of the Chosen, sat and wondered why this fervor, this undoubted earnestness, had not been directed towards Paul Kruger in the days when a word from the Dutch churches in South Africa would have prevented the war.

THE PULPIT SLANDERER.

Then came the sermon. No particular verse of the Scriptures was taken—the text was a Psalm in the whole. There was no "secondly" and very little "lastly." Verse by verse the Psalmist's song was taken to illustrate the depravity of the British. Each injustice to Israel had a parallel today. Each passionate appeal of David had application to the case of Chamberlain's victims in the north. It was the fourteenth psalm that he took as a subject. The fool has said in his heart that the cause of the burgher was a lost cause; that the Lord was not behind His people; that the accursed tyranny of the oppressor should prevail.

And what of these oppressors? These

Expectant Motherhood

McDonald, Ga., July 15, 1900.

I advise every suffering woman to take Wine of Cardui. While I was going with my other children I was compelled to stay in bed for days at a time but this time I have taken Wine of Cardui and Theodor's Black-Draught and have been able to do all my household work without any trouble. I am expecting every day to be confined. My husband thinks Wine of Cardui is the best medicine in the world. He takes a dose of Theodor's Black-Draught every night and gives some to the children. He has not lost a day from work this year. He tells his friends about your wonderful medicines and I tell my lady friends to use your Wine of Cardui.

There are thousands of women who shrink in terror at the thought of the baby's coming. But child-birth is one of the workings of Nature and it was not intended to imply torture and agony to the heroic mothers of the race. The woman who suffers torture during pregnancy and at child-birth has usually, by some indiscretion, injured the organs which make her a woman. Neglect of menstrual irregularities leads to ovarian pains, falling of the womb and leucorrhoea, and the period of pregnancy is necessarily distressing under these conditions.

WINE OF CARDUI

will regulate the menstrual function perfectly and eventually make the generative organs strong and healthy. Pregnancy and childbirth have no terrors for the woman who takes this pure Wine. A strong healthy womb will bring its precious burden to maturity with little or no pain. A healthy woman need not fear childbirth. Wine of Cardui completely cures all these troubles familiarly known as "female diseases" and equips the sensitive generative organs for pregnancy and childbirth. It will save any mother much pain and suffering. All druggists sell $1.00 bottles.
