The Woman Tempting.

How evident it is that we are all descended from Adam? We do not need the subtleties of ethnologists nor the dogmas of doctrinaires to make the thing certain. A father's face is repeated in his child, his gestures are, his habits of thought, his tricks of speech; it is unnecessary for an angel to descend with the living coal in hand to lay upon some prophet's lips that he may declare the parentage; it is unnecessary for a philosopher to made deductions and draw parallels and confute impossibilities to the same end; the thing is manifest; they are coins struck in one die. And certainly we hardly need anything more especial to demenstrate our descent from the man who hid himself behind a scantier fig leaf than the fig-tree bears when he declared in the face of his accuser. The woman gave me and I did "The woman gave me and I did est," for it is the first excuse that rises to the lips of most of Adam's

The woman to allure. Nobody has a word for that woman, who could hardly create the youth's demand. Does an old man live days or self-indulgence, neglecting home and his duties there for gas life and wine and cards? The head is shaken in made so unattractive by the woman presiding there or a unhappy that he is driven from it to those baser haunts. Nobody ing more attractive every day, instead of less so. Does a man commit one dishonor and another, barter power for gold, sell his fair fame for money? Net a voice is heard declaring that the man was tired of honest poverty, with its labors, needs, struggles, tumults; that he wanted the comfort which assurance of wealth gives, preferred it, and took the risks; that he loved his costly wines, his luxurious din-ners, his fast horses, his fine man-

A CAUSE FOR REFLECTION .- We made the acquaintance, a day or two ago, of a gentleman who is quite well off in this world's goods and he related a circumstance that recently occurred in his own per-sonal experience that has caused us much serious reflection. Our new acquaintance is an old bachelor, and finding wealth accumulating on his hands, and being without re-latives on this coast, bethought him of a widowed sister in arkanss of a widowed sister in Arkansa-who has two sons, but who, in the matter of earthly possessions, is comparatively peor. He wrote to his sister, telling her of his good fortune, and saying that if she would send one of her sons to live with him he would do a good part by him and make him his heir. The good woman, mother-like, preferring to keep both her sons at home as long as she can, simply wrote: "If you had married early, as I did, you might now have boys
