BRIGHAM CITY, Nov. 21, 1874.

Editor Deseret News:

In reference to an article contained in a late number of the "News" about the inexpediency of much importation of fruit trees, I fully agree with you. It would be for our best interest to patronize our nurseries at home, from where we can obtain the same varieties as we import, and in a far better condition to grow after being transplanted. Trees brought here from distant regions, which have been long out of the ground, thrive very slowly, if at all, if they live at all, especially when raised in a climate and soil different from ours. Trees are brought here from California, Ohio, and even from Florida, where the acclimation may be a question of time and skill. In order to get trees to grow as fast as if they never had been transplanted, it takes many minutes we spend in moving them the better, and the less change in soil and climate likewise. Hence there ought to be as little as possible in the center of every county in Utah. As a city is built in a day, an orchard made in a day is a possibility, if time and means be but minor considerations in the premises. I have it from a skilled orchardist, and not unconnected with personal experience, however, some may differ with me. Select quite large young trees in a good bearing condition, trust no nursery hand to dig them up, but do it yourself. Take your time and secure your trees with sound, unbroken roots. Cut one half off the top of each tree. Have large holes in preparation, and spare no time in placing your trees therein. Take judicious care after planting. Then success is secured, and you need not wait for long, weary years to become possessed of abundance of fruit. The ever fresh, the lovely, the beautiful evergreens, retaining us of one eternal summer, after autumnal storms have disrobed nature of her beauty, that should adorn, not only the lordly mansion, but the humblest cottage and the highway, why don't they flourish here? Let us import them plentifully, but not from South America.
