WEAVERVILLE, CAL., WIPED OUT BY FIRE.

Remarkable Tale of Shipwreck and Privation.—A Fire at Livingston, Mont.—Accidents and Suicides.

A special from Livingston, Mont., to the Salt Lake Tribune, says: A message announces that the fire has been gotten under control.

Guy Norman, a ship carpenter employed at the yards of Hay & Wright, Oakland, Cal., had his left shoulder so badly dislocated by a fall Thursday afternoon that it took five men to pull the bone back into place. Norman on a fall about ten feet, but his shoulder was completely out of place.

Charles A. Jenks, bookkeeper, and in his leisure and more disunified moments, president and corresponding officer of Troop A, National Guard of California, was sentenced Thursday by Judge Ogden to pay a fine of $250, or, in lieu thereof, to spend six months in the county jail, for starving horses placed under his charge.

Junction City, nine miles from Weaverville, Cal., was almost wiped out by fire early Wednesday morning. The blaze broke out in Hall's general supply store, burning it to the ground. The inhabitants of the little village turned out and fought the flames, but with their meager fire-fighting apparatus, could do but little.

William Trundle, an operative at the California Cotton mills, at East Oakland, Cal., had his right hand caught in a wool-picking machine on Thursday and was very badly crushed and lacerated. All of the flesh on the back of his hand was torn off, some of the smaller bones of which were also broken, and one of the tendons leading to his fingers was pulled out of place.

Henry Stahlecker, the 4-year-old son of Henry Stahlecker, an Oakland, Cal., blacksmith, accidentally poisoned himself Thursday morning and was only rescued from death by a hard struggle on the part of the surgeons at the receiving hospital. The child got possession of a bottle of cough medicine carrying a heavy proportion of laudanum and intended for use only in small potions, and drank about six ounces.

A sensation was caused at Santa Rosa, Cal., Thursday afternoon by the arrest of Joseph H. Reed, an old and wealthy citizen, on the charge of an attempt to commit arson. Reed, it is alleged, set fire to a certain house owned by him, by placing a lighted candle in one room, arranged so that when it burned in a certain point it would ignite some paper that had been saturated with oil. The discovery of the plan resulted in his arrest.

Mary Ward, wife of Thomas Ward, a well known stockman of Oakland, Cal., worried in a suit for divorce, has started some novel litigation to preserve possession of two valuable pieces of property at the corner of Eighteenth and Cypress streets. Mrs. Ward claims that the property belongs to her, but that her husband and his three children refuse to give it up, and for the purposes of a suit filed Thursday has transferred it to her sister, Mrs. Ingram, in possession of the land and stands as a defendant in an action brought by the latter to obtain possession of the property.

Ray Crellin, the seven-year-old son of Thomas Crellin, who lives at Durant and Alice streets, Oakland, Cal., fell from the back platform of a San Francisco car Thursday night and may die. He sustained a fracture of the skull and remained in a badly unconscious for four hours. The little fellow was caught between an the car started up, and was thrown into the street on New Broadway, near Durant street, striking his head on the macadamized pavement. He was picked up, covered with blood and moaning, and was immediately taken home, where medical attention was given him.

W. F. Keeson, a prisoner incarcerated in the county jail at San Francisco, serving a term that has fallen due to $250,000. He is serving a sentence of ten month on two charges of embezzlement. Keeson was the business manager of the California Commerce, a little sheet that ran for several months a year ago, and in accounting for the finances that passed through his hands, failed to make known certain transactions. He claims he has fallen heir to the amount stated, through the death of James Keeson, an uncle, a rich miner of Idaho and Nevada, who died some time ago at Austin, Iowa.

John W. Power of San Francisco, assemblyman from the Thirty-second district, occupied a cell in the county jail at San Rafael, Cal., on a criminal charge. Power is the legislator who gained so much notoriety last winter in connection with the coyote-scalp scandal. The charge preferred against Power is "obtaining goods under false pretenses." He was arrested Thursday night upon a warrant sworn to by Michael Murray, proprietor of the Bay View stables, from whom he hired a horse and buggy for a day and did not return to the owner until eight days afterward, and only then under compulsion.

Frank Walker, a barber of considerable means, committed suicide some time during Wednesday night at his residence in San Francisco by gas asphyxiation. Walker conducted a barber shop at Twenty-fourth and Bryant streets and left his place of business on Wednesday night in his usual manner. He did not visit his shop yesterday and an employe, H. J. Jahn, becoming alarmed at his absence, sought a brother of the barber and together they went to the house. They found Walker in the bath room. He was lying on the floor while the gas poured from a jet from which the tip had been removed. He left a note asking his wife's forgiveness.

A plan, which if it matures and finally bears fruit, will mean an increase of the revenue of San Francisco of over $1,000,000, has been set on foot among the liquor dealers and is at present the subject of more than ordinary discussion among the wholesalers and retailers of that city. At a meeting of the California State Protective association of wholesale and retail liquor dealers held on Wednesday night the proposition of asking the board of supervisors to raise the liquor license from $20 to $500 a year, thereby increasing the city's income from $200,000 to $1,200,000 per annum, was discussed, and while no definite course has yet been decided upon, it is believed the matter will be carried out sooner or later.

The California vintage is now under full way. It is later than ordinarily. Cold nights and damp mornings retarded its opening for several weeks, but those climatic conditions have been favorable to the quality of the wine. It is said that it will be superior to that of any vintage since 1887, while the dry wine crop will be the largest which the state has produced since the great year of 1890. The only drawback to the favorable conditions of the viticultural situation are of man's own making. Nature has done all that is possible to render this industry as prosperous as that of others in California, but the war between the large dealers and the producers has resulted in the cutting of prices and a future which is dark with distrust and uncertainty.

Mrs. Fannie Carroll of Oakland, Cal., was taken Thursday to the receiving hospital suffering from the effects of gas poisoning. Mrs. Carroll has one of her legs broken, and, on account of her crippled condition, her husband, a bartender, has been in the habit of breaking for every night they were married, some three years ago. He broke her jaw with his fist a few months ago, and on Wednesday last gave her such a thrashing that her limbs and body are covered with bruises. She went to the receiving hospital during the evening and had a knife wound in one of her limbs attended to, the surgeon in her house to find that her husband had gone out. Some time during the night she arose, turned on the gas, and at 9 o'clock in the morning was found by a neighbor in an unconscious condition.

Miss Annie de Lissale, a domestic about 22 years of age, committed suicide at 1101 Post street, San Francisco, some time Wednesday evening. The cause for so fatal a step is unknown, but it is rumored that the woman's mind was affected by illness. The suicide was discovered by Mrs. Fire de Lissale, a sister, and before she could reach the room to kill her identity, but little is known about Miss Lissale, who is supposed to have some friends in Toledo and in Berkeley, but so far the coroner has been unable to find them. Miss de Lissale had been in the employ of Mrs. A. Kenny, widow of the late capitalist, for the past two years, but gave up her position a week ago last Monday, as she had been ill for some time and was getting worse. She told Mrs. Kenny she was going to a hospital and would soon return. She did not.

A sensational tale of shipwreck and privation is that told to the crew of the Belsize, the Newcastle bark wrecked on Stradbroke island on August 7th of last year. Out of sixteen men who left Newcastle, thirteen have arrived to tell the tale. Three who left their lives were the captain, the first mate and the carpenter. The captain, who had been ill for months previous to leaving Newcastle, died on August 5th from the effects of exposure in the open boat. Never does precious to this the sole loss for life through the capsizing of the boat of which he had charge, and the carpenter died shortly after arrival at Sophia island, which joins the castaways finally succeeded in reaching after terrible hardships. This is the story contained in Australian mail advices brought to San Francisco by the steamer Thursday, and solves an ocean mystery when succeeding search for nearly a year had failed.
