

GEORGE Q. CANNON
EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

Wednesday, October 2, 1873.

The reading public is getting pretty well tired of the Stanley-Africanus controversy. The general belief appears to be that he did discover, relieve and bring communications from the lost traveler, however unbelievable many people may be concerning Mr. Stanley's report as an entirety, he being a sensational correspondent of a sensational paper, both exceedingly enterprising, but neither overburdened with scrupulousity.

The Herald and its adventurous correspondent are a last shot in the controversy upon the question of the veracity of the latter, the immediate occasion being Stanley's answer to the damaging statements of Noe in the New York Sun. Stanley, writing from London, expresses astonishment at the debased character of Noe; regrets that a New York newspaper could lend itself to the discussion of details of Noe's letter, which, that Noe, the most atrocious falsehoods; says that he (Stanley) never intentionally injured any living man; that in 1866 in the East he took Noe as a kind of companion; that when a few miles out from Smyrna Noe set fire to a valuable Turkish grove, endangering the lives of the party; that he (Stanley) punished Noe with few strokes of a switch; that Noe was insulted near Chios by a brigand chief; that he (Stanley) struck the chief with his sword, which caused the party to suffer indignities and outrages at the hands of the brigands; and that Noe may possibly have been stung with the recollection of that slight, and have determined to show his resentment upon the author, when the latter's name was on everybody's tongue, by investing him with a Satanic character.

Stanley then enters into a defence against the accusations levelled at him about the Livingstone letters, affirms that he did not touch with pen or pencil the letters sent by Livingstone to Bennett and the Herald, and of other communications speaks as follows:

As for the authenticity of the other letters which I brought with me, Lord Granville, of the Foreign Office; J. B. Smith, of the Standard; the Doctor's eldest son; Miss Janet Livingstone, the Doctor's sister; Miss Agnes Livingstone, Captain Black, of the Pacific and Oriental Company; Mr. James Young, of Durris House, near Aberdeen; Dr. John Kirk, Her Britannic Majesty's Consul at Zanzibar; Rev. Horace Walter, the Doctor's friend, and a letter of all come forward to testify to their authenticity. In the letters to his children Dr. Livingstone speaks of things with which no living person, least of all an American newspaper correspondent, could possibly be acquainted. In his letters to the Foreign Office the Dr. writes of countries that were wholly unknown to any one east of the Lake Tanganyika, that he saw, however fertile, could have imagined.

Stanley alludes to Queen Victoria sending him a gold snuff-box enriched with pearls and diamonds, and a letter of commendation, signed by Earl Granville; also to her gracious reception of him (Stanley) at Dunrobin Castle, and her personal thanking him. He further refers to the "Lett's Diary," full of observations and geographical notes, which he delivered to Miss Agnes Livingstone and which is now deposited in a Glasgow bank; and to the Doctor's chronometers and watches, for which he (Stanley) holds the receipt from Admiral Richards, of the Hydrographic office, London.

Stanley in conclusion advises unbelievers in his story to form another expedition to Central Africa and find out for themselves from Livingstone himself, whether or not he was discovered and reported of correctly by Stanley.

In a postscript the redoubtable Stanley disposes of his Omaha slanderer by saying that the said slanderer's slanders were promulgated because he (Stanley) gave said slanderer a vigorous public kicking in his rearward parts. Altogether, Stanley's defense shows that, whatever may be the truth about his African adventures, he is an expert with the switch and the boot toe.

The drama of the fall of the son of Mr. C. was not by his paramour, Mrs. Fair, were watching and reputedly determined to shoot that lady, if they could get the chance. That same fatal and acrimonious of the shooter on the score of temporary insanity, would be the next thing in the calendar of order. That same of Mrs. Fair's friends would feel bound to become temporarily insane too for the purpose of shooting them. Then more temporary insanity for shooting purposes on the Crittenden side, and then more on the Fair side, and so on and so forth, insuring a reign of ebullitions of temporary insanity for shooting purposes, and a murderous vendetta, originating in a debauchery, that might be expected to deluge portions of the country with blood.

This whole Fair-Crittenden affair is a very foul affair at best, and is a wretched commentary upon the ruthless loose-neckedness of some men and women of ability and social position in this great country.

The renown and prestige which Stanley and the Herald have attained by the Livingstone expedition are inclining other enterprising journals to imitate in extraordinary and unique reportorial adventures. The exploits of a reporter of the New York Tribune recently, in personally going through and exposing the mystery of the matter is to be followed, it is stated, by an investigation of the emigrant business, by an enterprising journalist, who, to make his report as realistic as possible, is supposed to have taken steamer passage from an English port, to pursue his journey seaward and overland with the emigrants, and relate his experience of the treatment of them by land and on the broad ocean. He will find that emigrants on steamers have not so much to complain of, but if he has gone to the bottom of his little plaything, called to him that "now he was shut down forever," and closed the cap over him, and he was dead. When he was taken out of the water, he had lost his reason from fright and distress, and it is said, the consequence.

A nice old lady of sixty summers, who has just married for the first time, caused some merriment in the Meriden depot, by her anxiety to have everybody rejoice with her. On meeting a friend, she said in a low tone, evidently intended to be heard by all in the room: "I am married, and am still in my wedding tower, and these are my wedding clothes, and that's my husband's account of it." The old fellow seemed to be as delighted as his wife.

The Legislature of Georgia, with a view to the encouragement of manufacturing and industrial enterprises, has adopted a law exempting, for a period of ten years, all cotton and woolen mills that may be built in that state, from taxation. The exemption includes county and municipal as well as State taxes, and embraces the real estate, buildings, machinery, and other property employed in the business. The act covers not only new enterprises to be undertaken hereafter, but all additions to existing establishments.

Pittsburg papers report that the Pittsburgh locomotive engineer recently had an offer of an order to manufacture fifty locomotives to go to Europe, which, the works being taxed to their full capacity, was declined. The order was for building engines 15 for the Pittsburgh, Washington & Baltimore Railroad, 12 for the Allegheny Valley, 15 for the Pan Handle, and 3 for the Texas and Pacific. Locomotive engines are generally all full of work, and it is difficult to get orders filled without giving pretty long time for the builders.

Our Indian guests paid a visit to the tomb of Washington at Mount Vernon yesterday, and seemed delighted to escape for a time from the heat and dust of the capital. On their way down the river they were told that they were going to visit the tomb of the first Great Father. On their arrival at the tomb each Indian walked up to the iron door, and passing his right hand through the grating, looked in, as if shaking the hand of a friend. When asked by the interpreter what they were doing, their reply was, "We are shaking hands with the spirit of the Great Father."

During the recent absence of the editor from the city some strictures appeared in the News on the subject of the Cook cattle-stealing case, which reflected severely upon the character of Mr. Jacob Smith, and which had been seen, would not have been published. The legal examination of the case afterwards proved the charges against Mr. Smith were unsubstantiated by the evidence produced. We endeavor to do justice to no person, and we regret that anything should have appeared in the News that could be construed to reflect unjustly upon any one, whatever his position or surroundings may be, or that would convey a wrong impression to the public respecting any person, especially one concerned in a case to be tried before a legal tribunal.

Correspondence.

ALMA, near Evanston, Wyoming, Sept. 30th, 1873.
Editor Deseret News:
Dear Sir—In my wanderings as a home missionary among the saints, I have never found any place where they are more prominent in their religious life than at this place. They have a good Sunday school here, attended by 40 or 50 scholars, and a day school well attended; and last, though not least, they have a very excellent choir, led by Brother James E. Stone, whose numerous family take an active part in the service, making their meetings go off lively.

In all my travels among the Saints I have never found any place where they are more prominent in their religious life than at this place. Stone, whose numerous family take an active part in the service, making their meetings go off lively.

To say the least, I feel well pleased with the union of the people here, yet there is here, as in all other places, room for improvement.

One of the greatest faults that I find with the place is the houses that the people occupy are very cold and uncomfortable, for this is a cold locality. It is to be hoped that the company will look to this matter soon.

JAMES S. BROWN.

EASTERN NOTES.

Memphis drunks cost $50 each. A seat for loafers, with a galvanic battery attachment, is out. A misguided Minnesota County Fair offers premiums for the three heaviest public kickings in its rearward parts.

The Freebody of Niagara has issued a letter to the churches condemning the purchase of "prize-packages."

The New York police commissioners appointed three colored men to be inspectors of election.

The elevated railroad in New York is doing a good trade. Preaching and practice are different things the world around. The "Gospel Aid Society," of Atlantic City, got into bad luck with the police arrested the entire organization.

The irrepressible Cedar Rapids Republican has discovered a sure cure for warts on a cow's nose, viz: "If you are small, cut off the water, if it is large, cut off the cow."

A St. Louis Dutchman lately complained to the mayor that if the boys didn't stop going to swimming in the river where his daughters could see them, he would make trouble. "Ah, Mr. Schmeckhorn," replied the Mayor, "if I remember rightly, your house is half mile or more from the river."

A Hartford gentleman, weary with travel, put up at a hotel at Westbury, Conn., one evening, and on awaking the next morning found a planing-mill next door in full blast, and the noise pursuing their usual avocations. "Great heavens," said he, "have a sleep till Monday morning!" The landlord replied that the tollers were Seventh-day Baptists.

FOREIGN NOTES.

The licensed gaming houses in the German watering places are all to be closed forever on the last of September. Harriet Martineau and five other English women have petitioned the House of Commons to disperse with the "cat" as a means of punishment. Punch's cartoon represents a German trooper, who, on looking at the description to the French loan, exclaims: "Mein Gott, mein Gott! and dey say 've plundered dem!'"

It is gratifying to know that among the persons granted by the English Government this year, as to Mr. Wood, the widow of the late William Wood, inventor of the process of weaving carpets by machinery.

English officials propose to introduce a large number of foreign troops into the Postoffice, where the gentlemen in the office are so ungallant as to hold indignation meetings and protest against the admission of the authorities.

At Exeter, England, on Aug. 17th, all the public houses having been closed at eleven o'clock, a large crowd insisted on the principal hotels and a gentleman's club being closed also. There was a riot, and a rioting, which was suppressed by the police.

The Pink Mail Gazette says that after their expulsion from Germany the Jesuits of the Rhine provinces will go to Holland, where, as to Mr. Wood, the widow of the late William Wood, inventor of the process of weaving carpets by machinery.

Isaac Pitman, the English reformer, who has been prominently engaged in the temperance and co-operative movement, has been elected to the chair of the new system of writing, has fallen into the most embarrassing pecuniary difficulties, and a national fund has been started for his relief.

The funeral of Pere Hyacinthe took place according to the London Echo, on September 5. It is the custom among Roman Catholic religious communities to consider any member that deserts the community, as a heretic, and of burying him in a common grave. This was done at the Convent of Dominicans, to which Mr. Hyacinthe belonged. A coffin was placed in the middle of the chapel, and a customary burial service observed. It is said the scene was "most imposing."

A letter from Berlin represents Prince Bismarck in a new light—namely, in that of a paper-monger. The paper manufacturer established by the Imperial Chancellor on his estate at Varzin has proved so successful, says the writer, that it is impossible to meet the large orders for paper sent to him from all over the world. This paper is made of chips of fir—that, at least, is the chief element—and the annual consumption of fir trees is at the rate of 600 kilofers to keep the manufactory supplied.

A new workshop is now being erected, which will require no fewer than 1,500 kilofers of wood a year. The fir forests in the district of the prince are being planted with fir trees, and the necessary supplies for several years of the raw material for Prince Bismarck's paper mill.

The workmen employed at the engine factory of the Prussian State, Berlin, demanded a 25 per cent increase of wages to the amount of twenty per cent, under threat of a strike. A committee of inquiry, composed of engineers and managers, having examined the books of the firm, announced to the workmen that if this advance was granted the factory could only be carried on at a loss. The workmen, however, maintained their demand, and the factory was closed. In consequence of this all the engine manufacturers have determined to smash with dynamite the works of the firm, and to employ who shall contribute to the support of the workmen on strike, and they have formed a society in order to carry out a common course of action.
