ties with occasional street processions and recessions in initation of ghosts, and the saw toothed countenance of the festive cumpkin will be in evidence on the street as well as indoors. Exhibi-tions of disorder take on the more fan-tastic forms in college towns, where the ingenuity of the undergraduate mind is displayed in manifest ways. A common feat is to harvest all the front gates within easy distance of the col-lege buildings and make a bonfire of them on the college campus. If the damp and unwholesome features of the local guardians of the peace show up in protest, they are speedily driven away by a mob of students. At New Haven it has been the pleasant custom for years to fringe the tail fron pai-lings of the city cemetery with a long array of gates on this particular night, and no street lamp is safe in its in-tegrifty. In fact, as to street lamps, for over 20 years there was a lamp at the corner of Library and High streets in New Haven that was never in a whole condition for 24 consecutive hours. The contractor made a fortune out of that lamp. ORIGIN OF CELEBRATION.

According to the encyclopedias, and of course they are always right, the celebration originated in a Greek church feast of the fourth century; and the advent of the seventh century it by the advent of the seventh century it had become a well settled custom. It was a day set apart in memory of the dead of the year, all of whom had be-ome hallowed, or were supposed to be, if they hadn't. The Druids ob-served the feast also, and in here centuries a good deal of innocent amusement was gotten out of the cus-tom build the deal of the custom, notwithstanding its original fu-neral surroundings. But within the last 50 years with the introduction of the element of disorder, it has deter-iorated and according to "standard authorities" it is liable to die out afte awhile.
