CHILD BURNED TO DEATH IN A BLAZE

Intense Heat in California—Crushed by a Wheel—Children Incinerated—Terrible Deeds.

Isaac Fowler, a rancher, was found dead near his home near Chilcoot, Cal., Friday morning. The coroner's jury found that death resulted from contusions of the brain.

Ono, Or., was killed Friday as a result of a drunken quarrel. Orenbergh, formerly of Ono, was caught by the engine. He was a young, unmarried man, and his relatives lived near San Jose.

Lewis Jenkins was accidentally killed at Ukiah, Cal., Saturday afternoon. He was a teacher and had a school house on the ranch. In attempting to make a short turn he was thrown out upon his head, breaking his neck. The fatal wound in the temple was caused by his head striking the fence post. Death was instantaneous.

The heat on the California desert was terrific on Saturday. It was 122 at 11 a. m., and the mercury rose steadily to 128 at 2 p. m. Then the sky clouded over and a drop of 2 degrees resulted. The thermometer was kept in the shade always, both at the depot and the mill company's house at Salton. At Volcano Springs the agent reported 128 as the highest point reached. The heat was so intense that a Mexican working on the section between Salton and Dormin had to be brought in, his tongue was black, and so swollen, and he vomited copiously.

Billy Hunter, a half-breed Indian employed by Jose Romero, a cattleman, has just brought to town news of the murder of a man's body on Bear creek, forty miles east of Fresno, Cal. The child attracted the attention of Hunter and his Indian companions, and they began searching the leaves and brush. One of the men found a man's arm. Then they saw traces of the rest of the body, which was entirely eaten, and had been buried about a week. The head was only a few feet from a man named Burns. The coroner is investigating to ascertain whether or not there was foul play.

The six-year-old daughter of William Young, residing near Lowerdell, Cal., built a fire in the kitchen stove. The little one, with her sister, went to an adjoining room for the purpose of way to play. The boy returned to the house and was met back by the little girl on the coming child. As the woman stepped to the door she saw the latter in flames. The father and some neighbors hastened to the place at once. The boy was not fire, but what had with the building was saved. The back of the child was burned. At first she could not be found, but it was thought she had escaped, but as she did not return to the house the search was renewed. A short time after the remains of the child were found in the ashes. She was burned beyond recognition. The right arm and leg were burned entirely off. The child, according to the boy, had caught fire from the stove. The boy was not burned, but was badly frightened.

There is a movement under way to establish a Japanese silk factory in San Francisco, Cal. Fifty Japanese merchants are doing business in Alameda, Oakland and San Francisco and start the project and will continue the establishment on a cooperative plan. Mr. Shinto, who conducts a silk store on Market street, is at the head of the enterprise, but he is now in Japan for the purpose of arranging with some expert silk weavers there, who will probably come to this country at an early date and put some of their knowledge of silk goods at their disposal in the enterprise. The little brown men, it is said, have always taken readily to the trade of salesmanship, their dexterity selling instrument is to the finer grades of work. The society will not be heavily capitalized, but most of the shareholders will actively engage in the business. They will simply rent a building at the outset and make all the silks they can and sell them at the best price they can get, promising an interesting bid to the event of competition.

David Starr Jordan, president of Stanford university, is in receipt of a telegram from Charles F. Hamlin, acting secretary of the treasury, requesting him to accept the presidency of the delegates commission. In reply Professor Jordan has wired his acceptance of the appointment. Professor Jordan will be one of the delegates on the commission Dr. Skinner and Louis of the Smithsonian Institution.
