He made plain that he did not intend to endorse the custom of employing the classified service being compelled to contribute to the campaign fund, yesterday, after sending a check for $300 to the county committee.

That check, said the mayor, "was my personal contribution to the campaign. There will be no assessment of classified employees for campaign purposes. If any of the employees contribute voluntarily nothing can be done, as they would not be assessable to the civil service bureau. But there will be no contribution about their contributions, and a voluntary subscription is not a solicited subscription."
