in the expert testimony on affairs of chemistry this morning. He watched the witnesses much more closely than is his custom, and his face betrayed his interest instead of the usual pla-cidity of countenance with which he conducts most of the cases before him.

JUDGE TAKES A HAND.

It is evident that the farmers regard the application as one that will undo all of their previous work to have the smoke problem solved. Judge Wil-liam H. King led in the examination of witnesses today for the farmers, while County Commissioner John C. Mackay, chairman of the farmers' com-mittee, was at his side, and took a keen interest in the testimony.

MR. MACKAY'S SIDE.

When asked for his view of the pres-ent case, and to state why the coment case, and to state why the com-mittee was opposing the move so de-cidedly, Mr. Mackay declared that the bag house was a mere delusion in that it was the sulphur gas as sulphur-diox-ide which did most of the damage, especially at some distance from the smelters, and that the bag house did not in the least prevent the escape of

EXPERIMENTER TESTIFIES.

EXPERIMENTER TESTIFIES. The first witness of the day was Mr. Sprague, whom the smelter advanced as the experimenter, through whose work science had been made to ad-vance, and whose inventions and dis-coveries had been the cause through which the smelter could now come in-to court saying that ways were known to control smoke and fumes that were not known when the decree of Judge Marshall was entered. Mr. Sprague outlined the nature of the experiments with the bag house and rold of the fact that it solved problems which could not be solved before it was erected. He was positive in stating that the American smelter used no such de-vice on its smoke, and told of patents now pending on features of the bag house.
