WORST HAILSTORM FOR MANY YEARS

Davis County Fruit Farmers Heavily Hit With Big Losses.

BOUNTIFUL ESCAPES DAMAGE

First Time the District Has Missed Regular Visit of Destructive Downfall.

What was doubtless the worst hailstorm in the history of this section passed over the southern end of Davis county yesterday morning about 11 o'clock. The hall fell for perhaps 10 minutes, carrying in its wake absolute destruction to all the strawberry plants, garden stuff, small fruits and even cherries and larger fruits just gathering their early growth. The storm came up suddenly from the west and struck West Bountiful, yeering off a trifle north of east and striking Centerville in its destructive course. The strip covered by the storm was about half a mile in width, and the growing crops in its path were completely devastated. Hailstones as large as marbles fell and in the brief 10 minutes over which the storm extended the ground was covered with hail. The garden stuff was cut to pieces, the cherries strewn on the ground and tomato vines were cut down and the fruits destroyed. Even the birds were killed in the trees, and down and the fruits destroyed. Even the birds were killed in the trees, and several people lost numbers of chickens that were caught out in the storm. The glass in the greenhouses was broken in pieces, and the flowers cut down and destroyed.

Some idea of the damage done by the storm may be had from the statement of a man who had half an acre of strawberries growing. He stated that his crop on this patch of berries was worth more than $200 and it is a total loss. Other fields in the wake of the storm were injured to a similar extent, all kinds of vegetation being beaten down and destroyed.

A peculiar feature of the section of country through which the storm passed is the fact that for two years past the gardeners of East Bountiful have suffered great losses from hall-storms, but these escaped untouched by yesterday's storm.

That the storm was confined to the district between the lake and the mountains comprised in the territory occurred by west Bountiful and Centered district between the lake and the mountains comprised in the territory occupied by West Bountiful and Centerville, is shown by reports from other sections. At Farmington, half a dozen miles north of the stricken district, a heavy storm fell, but no particular damage was done. Hall fell for about five minutes and this was followed by a rain storm. No damage has been reported from the Farmington district as a result of this storm, the farmers rather being glad the rainstorm came.

storm, the farmers rather being glad the rainstorm came.

At Kaysville rain has been falling for two or three days, but the hall storm passed this town by.

At Brigham it rained all day yesterday. No hall has fallen, however, and the fruit crop is not injured.

From Logan comes the report that no rain at all has fallen, although the sky is hung with clouds.

At American Fork, in Utah county, rain has been falling for two days, and telephone lines are down in the valley. But no destruction to crops has followed the storm. At Provo it has been raining during the night, but is now partially clearing up.

AFFRAY AT ORPHEUM.

Manager Winch Parts Belligerents and Receives a Glad Surprise.

Manager Will R. Winch was the unconscious star performer in a little unheralded act on the Orpheum stage last

At the conclusion of the performance, and just after the last of the audience had passed out, there came a hurry-up call from Acting Stage Manager Joseph F. Goss, to Manager Winch, asking him to come to the stage at once as there was some to the stage at once as there was some trouble on Manager Winch made a bee-line for the stage, followed by those in the secret, Reaching the stage he found Jarrow, the magician, and Wells of Wells & Sells in a thrilling "buckets of blood" affray. Manager Winch took an immediate hand in the affair. Mr. Young then stepped forward and made the following explanation:

We have come to you to kick; to kick like people of the profession are entitled to kick. We want to kick against your good management; your friendship, your courtesy and your good nature. We reserve the right to kick and in the suitan has offered personally to defray the cost of writing a national history of Turkey.

order to fittingly express the kick we have against you, we want you to accept this little testimonial, which symbolizes the 'Best People on Earth' (which we are) and which, whenever you see it, will remind you that we are only giving it to you because we are kickers, and because we wish always to have the privilege of making a kick against such a good manager, loyal friend and general good fellow.' As he spoke, Mr. Young handed Manager Winch a solid gold Elk's fob. Mr. Winch, though overcome at the unex-Which, though overcome at the unex-pected outcome of the supposed fight, and at the gift, made pertinent re-sponse. clated the tender of the gift, which he world ever treasure.

At the conclusion of the presentation, light refreshments were served and an impromptu program given, which was participated in by the employes of the house, and the performers on this week's Orpheum bill.

The fob is a very handsome and massive affair. The cross bar is of heavy embossed gold, with a shield on which is engraved, "W. R. W." The pendant is a massive, dull gold inished elk's head, on a base of brighter gold. The eyes of the elk's head are small rubles, while the motto of the lodge is engraved in blue enamel. On the reverse side of the pendant is engraved: "Presented by Orpheum employes, Salt Lake City, Season '08-'09."

NEWS THE NATIONAL GUARD

military matters is a subject with which those outside the army and the national guard are, as the general rule, not definitely informed. Lack of interest in such matters, or the occupation of the mind with others more directly congerned with matters of business is perhaps responsible for this lack of information. It is true also that Americans are given to feel that the nation is secure because of the patriotism of its people, a feeling, too, that in any time of need its stordy men would rise up and offer themselves to serve with the colors and that with them in the battle lines any foe would be repulsed.

The above is the criticism of the American people made by an Amerscale people made by an American people made by an American army officer of many years of service at a recent banquet of a patriotic society, and his words were not received with particular favor until by asking some of the guests personal questions on their own beliefs, he convinced them all he was speaking only truths learned in his long experience.

vinced them all he was speaking only truths learned in his long experience in the army, much of which was spent in recruiting.

It is not favored generally by the people of the nation to maintain a great standing army and in the absence of one, until the time comes which is now being worked for so assiduously by many men of weight in all nations, the era of unbroken peace, the necessity for a strong reserve becomes evident.

Congress by recent enactments has said that the second line of defense shall be the organized and equipped shall be the organized and equipped militia, trained in military matters and composed of men physically fit for the performance of military duties. The militia, then, is not strictly a state institution, but bears to the nation a still stronger relation than it does to its own state, for in time of need now the militia is subject to a call by the president to act wherever needed and under the same conditions as the regular army. Its equipment is provided by the government and its training conducted under a scheme framed ing conducted under a scheme framed in the division of militia affairs of the war department. Not many years ago this condition did not exist. Not many years ago the war department in the militia was indifferently trained, its discipline lax, its equipment inferior and in no manner or form was it fit to be selected to support the regular army. Its only serviceability was in domestic dis-orders. Now all is vastly changed. orders. Now all is vastly changed. The keen eye of the government is upon every state. Annual inspections of the state troops are now made and the condition found is reported to the secretary of war. The war department is making the militia officers' task one in which many things are demanded with the same precision and task one in which many things are demanded with the same precision and promptness that obtains in the regular army. The fact that instead of calling upon the militla as the second line of defense in the war with Spain, untrained volunteers were mobilized and sont to the front with only a few weeks' training in drill shows too plainly the condition of the militia 10 years ago. The recent congressional enactments which declare the national guard to be the declare the national guard to be the second line, show plainly indeed the difference existing between the two

In the event that a third line of de-fense some day should be required, it will be necessary to draw upon the militia for some of its officers and war-rant officers to take higher positions with an army recruited from the citizens of the states who have had no previous military training. This, in general, is the aim of the government. general, is the aim of the government. It intends to secure a strong force of trained militianen and from the officers it will exact the pursuit of a course of training that will guarantee to the general government in return for its liberal support a trained force of dependable men lependable men A comparison of the army and reserve of the United States with those of other countries shows how much is needed in the militia. It shows that recruits are needed in the militia of every state, and particularly in the western states. The United States army at present consists of 4,513 commissioned officers and 83,539 enlisted men, 10,000 of whom are 83,539 enlisted men, 10,000 of whom are in the Philippines and about 2,000 in Hawati. There are 30 infantry regiments, six regiments of field artillery, 2,002 enlisted men and 189 officers of engineers, 19,321 enlisted men and 620 officers of coast artillery, and the remainder in the other staff corps and departments, the whole, however, not exceeding 88,000 men. In the organized militia there are approximately 100 000 militia there are approximately 100,000 officers and men uniformed, equipped and for the most part fairly well inand for the most part fairly well instructed, but with much yet to be desired to provide an effective second line of defense. Germany has at her call 24,000 officers and 585,000 enlisted men on her peace footing, with provision for 3,000,000 trained men for war, Japan has 11,600 officers and 457,000 enlisted men, and all these are verticed. men—and all these are veterans of the late war in Manchuria. From other sources Japan can mobolize within three days' notice 1.000,000 men, all trained and ready for war. England has in her standing defensive force 10. has in her standing defensive force 10,-187 officers, 25,648 non-commissioned of-ficers, musicians and drummers, and 184,465 rank and file with a reserve of 742,900 for first call and 906,000 for second call. Russia is credited with a paper strength of 42,000 officers and 1,-000,000 enlisted men for peace and 75,-000 officers and 4,500,000 enlisted men for war. In the case of Russia, how-ever, the late war revealed that when called upon, the paper strength was far called upon, the paper strength was far greater than the actual strength of the army. Of no other nation cited, however, can this be said, for each year the number given above is actually employed in manner strength actually employed in manner strength actually employed. number given above is actually em-ployed in maneuver camps and is at all light on the present tariff contest.

Against this it is seen that Germany could assemble 3,000,000, Japan 1,750,000, England 2,000,000, and Russia, perhaps 5,000,000. Normally, the greatest number of men the United States could assemble would be in the neighborhood of 100,000 men at the same time to retain at the coast defenses the necessary number of men for their pro-The present week has been about the nost quiet one during the early spring in local automobile circles, but it has not been because there has been a falling off in the demand for cars, but because of a lack of machines. A few of the local concerns, the Consolidated Wagon & Machine company, the Utah Implement company, Studebakers, and the Sharman have received machines to fill orders placed a long time ago.

"If we had a bunch of orders come in right now we would be unable to fill them," said one dealer. "When there are only about 45 cars turned out a day and they have to fill a big demand all over the United States, you can see what chance there is to keep pace with the orders.
