THE COURTSHIP OF NAPOLEON III.
There are some curious anecdotes about Napoleon III. The "Sovereign of France" was once in the habit of writing to his mother, the Empress Eugenie, in the form of a letter to his father, King Louis Philippe. The letters were written in a very simple and direct manner, and were often very long. The Empress Eugenie would then read the letters to the King, and the King would then reply to the letters. The letters were often very long, and the King would often take a long time to reply to them.
