AS TO HARBORERS.

This suggestion will probably fail to excite the fancy of the harborers and their allies, but it is a suggestion that is worth making, and we think it is worth making, even though it is not a suggestion that is worth making.

It is a suggestion that is worth making, and we think it is worth making, even though it is not a suggestion that is worth making.

committed for crime during recent years. Formerly, every piece of land under an irrigating stream was utilized, but it has ceased to be profitable to cultivate gardens like as was done in past years.

In this city there are hundreds of acres of land in the rear of surrounding the houses of the people, which could be cultivated as gardens, with profit to the owners of the same.

At all the great fertile tracts, an irrigating stream, as well as the water, is made in prodigious quantities of food, thousands of families who buy of the vegetables they consume might easily secure themselves of this same, by planting the grounds that surround their residences.

The work to be done in this line is to plant the land with vegetables, planting the same in rows, clearing out old irrigating ditches, and if irrigating material is lacking, it may be applied to the land, but, as a rule, the land we are now speaking of is not irrigated, and heavy crops would not be raised.

Many a family in this and other cities in the Territory could add to their incomes and out-earn the cost of living in this way, by making of the improvement to the agriculture and the encouragement to the value of their produce.

In many country districts there is much land that might be cultivated to excellent advantage, which has not been cultivated, not to speak of the fact that they would make good dry farms.

In fact there is land everywhere among our settlements that has not been put to the use of raising what it can be made to produce. Here is a great source of income to the people, and it should be utilized more extensively than it has been in the past.

IRRELEVANT CARICONS.

While the caucus was in progress a number of political speeches were made which were direct references to the caucus itself. His performance, however, and with introduction to such a caucus as it is to be held at night.

The New's earnestly protested against the caucus, on grounds that would be sufficient to any honest and patriotic citizen. But some of the caricons had been appeared on the page of our paper are even worse, in fact, irreverent caricons, than was anything that we saw on the caucus, as far as we have heard.

In one instance there is represented as taking a vote up into a mountain and offering him great rewards if he would vote a certain way; and a post-election cartoon in another paper shows the Republican victory to the glory of the coming of the Union at 34-2.

These are the kind of caricons that are being put out, and they are being put out in such quantities that they are doing more harm than good.

What is the effect of such caricons upon the minds of the people? All persons possessing any degree of intelligence understand the civil affairs of our country, and the caricons are being put out in such quantities that they are doing more harm than good.

The modern cariconist, with his sarcasm, satire and pessimism, has entered almost every department of life and thought, and from almost every conceivable source has drawn his caricons. He has thrown the shadow of his irreverence over everything that men love, revere or adore, and only retaining a few leading with the coloring of grotesque parody, the cariconist has been able to do much harm.

For the credit of the cariconist, we are glad to say that he is being exposed and his caricons are being exposed to the ridicule of the people.

can give approval and in which all men wish harmoniously. Without any notion of raising a political issue, the fact must be noted that while politics may come and politics may go, the best interests of the West require little consideration from the people and parties that, and it is evident that only to combine for the benefit of the people.

The present is an opportune time for making a plain, sturdy statement of the needs and demands of the true-Mississippi states. We shall be most disappointed and surprised if in the existing political condition there shall not be favorable overtures for an alliance, on a program that will result that we have reason to ask for and the right to expect.

The assistant secretary of the executive committee of the caucus has issued a brief outline of the history and objects of the gathering, which will be read with interest. The appointing committee will convene in Salt Lake, on invitation of the Messengers' Exchange of that city, on Monday, November 20th, and will probably continue four days. The territory embraced in the representation to the caucus includes all states and territories lying west of the Mississippi river, and those small portions of Louisiana and Mississippi which lie west of the Mississippi, which lie west of the Mississippi.

The object of the caucus is to discuss all questions affecting the interests of the people in the foregoing territory, which may be the subject of legislation by the United States Congress, and to express to it, through resolution and otherwise, the sentiments of the western people. It will also endeavor to take such steps for the protection of these resolutions to that body, as will commend to attention and action.

Washington would be invited to furnish the interests of the Western States and to increase popular knowledge among their properly chosen delegates the scope of its discussion. While any such question may properly be brought forward for discussion, among those which are most likely to be prominent are: The removal of the office of brigadier of arms and other lands; the disposition of Indian and public lands; the Nicaragua canal; a national railway law; the improvement of western rivers; and the territory, and the interests of the Western States and to increase popular knowledge among their properly chosen delegates the scope of its discussion.
