You don't really know what's good until you use

Ghirardelli's Ground
Chocolate

If you will drink Ghirardelli's Ground Chocolate with your meals every day for three months, in place of coffee or weak, watery coffee, you will find no argument or persuasion will induce you to touch them again. The headaches which you have almost come to consider inevitable and from which you secure only temporary relief by drinking more coffee, will entirely disappear, and instead of ailing in the morning, feeling nervous and irritable, you will feel fresh and bright. You will have a clear brain and strong muscles. There is no drink so refreshing, strengthening and sustaining as a cup of Ghirardelli's Ground Chocolate. It is the original and most delicious flavor while rendering the chocolate easily digestible. It is the most convenient form of chocolate, as it may be prepared instantly by the mere addition of boiling water. Ghirardelli's Ground Chocolate will also be found superior to cake chocolate, for cakes, puddings, candies, fudge, etc., on account of its more convenient form as well as its delicious flavor.

The color of this dressy suit is brown—that golden brown which tones so admirably with the fashionable golden brown footwear and the brown hat plume. The long pleated and untrimmed skirt joins a simple accordion plaited brown chiffon blouse with trimmings of brown and cream Valenciennes lace. The little coat has cape-like sleeves over puffs of velvet and a cape effect, which rounds down in the back to meet the top of the square collar, which is trimmed with button-centering rosettes of the silk, which terminate a silk belt fastening in the front with two more of the same rosettes. The little toque is brown beaver trimmed with shaded brown wings.

LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF A CITY
AS SEEN BY A SALT LAKE WOMAN

HOPE springs eternal in the human breast; and it is ever-present hope that has caused so many people to greet 1908 with gladness. Hope is a kind of mind-cure; and as one of the old philosophers has said, it is the most universal thing in the world, for it "stays with those who have nothing else."

If one is "up against it," and has passed through all the throes of hardships, but still retains a "high hope" for the future, all the chances are for him and the betterment of his condition sure.

About two weeks ago, a young man came to town in search of work. He had passed through the one-meal-a-day period, and had reached the point where he was the possessor of nothing absolutely save hope. His one possession kept him cheerful. All who approached him were warned by the reflection of his optimism and to him he held in these hard times when men are being "laid off" four days after reaching town he had secured a responsible position. Unknown and uncommended he won out for "The man worth while is the man who can smile. When everything goes dead wrong."

You must be up and coming if you want to strike a job. You must carry a prosperous air, not necessarily fine clothes, and a diamond stud, but an air that exudes prosperity, as air is the proprietor's right to boom, if you attach yourself to it. The shy, timid, the disgruntled need not apply. The man bearing the stamp of promise, promptness, progression and progress is going to find the "pie-job" every time.

One of the timid sort—a sterling character—entered one of our business offices not long ago, and applied for a situation. "I want a young man who will do thus and so," said the manager curtly. "Will you do it?"

"I can try," was the quiet response.

RICH GIRL MISSING.
Miss Elvira Pesca, 22 years old, daughter of Francesco Pesca, a wealthy retired real estate dealer, of New York, has disappeared.

Miss Pesca left a note addressed to "all the family" vaguely hinting at suicide though for what reason is a puzzle to her parents and the police. According to her family she had no love affair.

The manager reflected. He was in desperate need of a man to fill the vacancy. "I am sorry, my young man," he said finally, but you'll not do; the position is responsible; I cannot risk a man who will try."

This would have fired some make-up and put them on their mettle, at once. This young man turned away puzzled. "The least a fellow can do is to try," he said to a friend, afterward. "It may be the least he can do but not the most. A little later another applicant entered that office, a trifle shabby, but the sort "that produces the goods."

"I want a man who will do this and so," was the stereotyped information of the manager.

"I'll do even, sir," came the lightning answer, before the question was put. "When can you begin?"

"Straight off, sir."

"The job's yours, my boy," said the manager. "Dispatch is the soul of business."

House-hunting shows up many ideas of life—the kind and the selfish; the clean and the unclean; the real and the sham; the generous and the mean. "Come in and I'll show you through," said the sharp-faced, sharp-eyed owner—a woman—of an artistic-looking home in town. When you've said all, the scheme of color was not to be questioned—it was perfect, and the mistress seemed to be banking her enormous nest on that, at least, so it seemed. Window seats and cozy nooks, here and there, were also held above the real home essentials; also, grill work, and portable craft, naturally sent the rental sky high.

No convenience, and all things dingy and unsanitary, pervaded the culinary department; but, of course, that was at the back of the house.

Not a sleeping room boasted a clothes-dresser, but that was upstairs. "Servant's room, you say? Oh, for that matter, the maid can always make up her cot in the kitchen."

"You see, there are eight nice rooms—and, the price? Just $75. I'm giving up my pretty home because I'm tired of being without help. I want to board."

And therefore, putting up the rent to cover the board was plainly written all over the little woman. There was nothing absolutely about that house to warrant such an exorbitant figure.

Note the contrast. The face of a "plain country woman" appeared at the door of a beautiful, solidly-built, pressed brick home.

"Come right in," she said cordially. "Have a chair. Yes, my home is for rent; we're going into a smaller place—hard times, you know, and I must do my own work."

No show there, you can feel it in the very atmosphere from cellar to garret. "Now, we built this home for warmth, comfort, and convenience."

"This honest woman," there's no special beauty about it."

No special beauty! It was everywhere. For convenience and sanitation, that kitchen was certainly a comfort and a joy. The basement with its finished rooms, and cement floors, were almost worth the price asked for the entire house. Every bedroom with light pouring in from all directions, boasted clothes closets of sufficient size for trunks. The walls were not hung to the floor, nor were there gaudy coverings covering gaudy—just beautiful hardwood floors.

Solidity, simplicity, beauty, all things clean, sanitary, convenient, in fine amplitude, with the sweetest odor pervading because there was no odor at all—and the price?

"We feel we can hardly afford to rent for less than $50 a month," was the startling announcement of this conscientious and "plain country woman."

There's a confusion of signs about the town—For Rent, For Sale, Measles, etc.

No doubt led by the sign, and not by the letters, thereon, a woman who had been house-hunting in our town until it was a case of all signs looking alike to her, started in to the door of a modern-looking home—that is, modern on the outside—and rang the bell. An astonished-faced lad opened the door about the eighth of an inch.

"For rent?" was asked, sweetly.

"Sure, lady, indeed," answered the fellow, though only a "kitted youth."

"Come to look at 'em?"

But the lady was patting down the walk to the gate.
